Do you mean like a third world country irl whose nation state equivalent is first world, or a nation states nation that is third world in its lore then instantly turns first world?

The latter.

I mean, part of all of that is because apparently people on NS have no knowledge of current African affairs in a meaningful way.

I honestly find African history and current events more interesting than any other continent, mainly because there's not as much unimportant stuff stuffed in. I want to read the news to actually hear about what's happening, not be force-fed internet trends and political views, and when the news is talking about African events... well, The Onion put it perfectly...

Plus they have more badass military conflicts (eg the Toyota War between Chad and Libya in which the Chadian army figured out that if they drove at speeds in excess of 100 kph they could outrun landmine explosions), better money (eg the Zimbabwe 100 trillion dollar bill) and better politics (eg the fact that South Sudan has five vice presidents). What more could you possibly want?

Does the Bantu Expansion or the Holocene desertification count as current African affairs?

Nowadays Homofront only exists as a strawman to be used by homophobic characters on PruCh.

How about nations that want to show how tolerant and accepting they are of LGBT people but they also want to show how perfect and great their Mary Sue self-insert leader is, so they have their current leader being responsible for legalizing homosexuality, passing anti-discrimination laws, allowing same-sex marriage, etc.

That's mildly annoying.

For me, it's more of a "well, people sorta got along and didn't care much if at all, then they punched in a few laws circa 1920/30 for the sake of it with some more added on circa 1960/70/80... Really though, who cares? Everyone's human. No need to do harm over what others like."

But I suppose it does get a little weird when you have countries explicitly outlaw homosexuality only to suddenly turn tail when the edge factor wears off to try to seem more accepting.

Does it have anything to do with the fact that Japan and Germany were on the same side in WWI? Or before that, the Meiji Constitution being based on the Prusso-German model?

Kinda felt like bringing this up because I'm in this box myself; I put myself in Germany before I threw myself into the weeb stuff lmao. I kinda just picked Germany at random.
