Just some friendly advice

Guard-Commander of Hyrule, Ilu

"Oh... I. I apologise to Hylia for using her name as an explicative as I was, admittedly close to doing so, however I hope that she can understand the reasoning of why I would do so... For... Forgive me for this, however what I see before me is nothing short of an abomination! This... Darned creature is. Worse than Staltpool! This is like a creature a mother would tell her young child about to keep them afraid and indoors during the late hours of the night...

*Sighs loudly* I've... Seen worse, I know this. I saw the sickly mask of the putrid Twilight King as he marched towards the contingent of Hylia Guard I served in not five years ago, accompanied by those beasts of shadow who could make the strongest stomach churn in anxiety... I must control oneself.

You... You're named Luden? That's quite the humble name for a... Creature.

As I come to terms with your monstrous form and look beyond it, I hope you can forgive me for my assumptions and my overt... Apprehension. For now I come to know that you did not always look this brutish, and I must express my deepest condolences for what you had suffered through to have given you this form... Executing the man who caused you such horrors when you rose to the power you wield today is truly something worth of laud, sir Luden. I am also pleasantly surprised that despite your brutish figure and the trauma you have sustained you defy expectations, for at first glance I could only assume for you to be as accursed as Zant, the wretched being that he was.

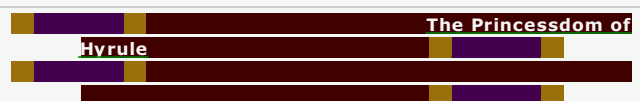

However, now I have to try to combat my confusion in your story that you present... I believe you had both mentioned that you took over the rule of your realm through trial by combat against the previous character that ruled beforehand, yet you mention that one of your closest friends... Izeal, correct? Had ruled before you as well? I would be concerned if you had slain your friend, however something nags for me to believe that it is not the case, and I sincerely hope you can confirm this. In addition, you call yourself an 'immortal', correct? Surely such a status of living for eternity can only be held by the higher beings that rule and dominate Hyrule or, in your case your own realm either through malevolence or benevolence... The Zora live long lives, and by Hylia's light even her child, Princess-Sovereign Zelda will only live to a similar age that I will. I hope that you are not claiming to be of godhood, that would be blasphemous...

Now, I have to soon bid farewell, sir Luden... I am quite surprised at how civil you are, in comparison to the first impressions your outward look may be, though I still cannot help but express confusion and even concern for the many of your claims and deeds. Otherwise, I could only imagine a Twilight Realm that was ruled by people like you than the malevolent Zant or his compatriots. It has been an honour."

(Sorry if this seems unorthodox, I'm tired and this was dropped on a hat tbh)

Anyways, for BN I shall give my link to Guard-Commander Ilu's detailing (Just scroll down to the bottom of the dispatch and there he is)

The Princessdom of Hyrule. A fanfiction based on the Legend of Zelda :: Twilight Princess that takes place half a decade after the conclusion of the game. A new caste of Hyruleans, no less the newly built army resent the old Guard and Princess-Sovereign Zelda for the surrender of the realm to the Twilight and the weakness of Hyrule from invasion...

Meanwhile, the Zora worry greatly about the militarization of Hyrule, and the Goron less so due to the Economic stranglehold of the Rupee of which they have as leverage.

Princess-Sovereign Zelda

Never again shall Hyrule fall, and never again shall we sully the name of Hylia under our weakness!

Well Well, who do we have here? A rather withdrawn young man it seems. So, while he is indeed a heathen, I shall judge his behaviour regardless, since misnaming Grand spirits as "gods" is merely a confusion one shouldn't be hated for. His services as war hero and knight commander are certainly praiseworthy, even if I sadly do not know much about him from the provided description, but I can see that he is at least capable of being polite to beings like Luden, which is an admirable trait indeed. He also is quite a pragmatist, even if he only dabbles in it and doesn't do the darker parts of it... Which could be seen as admirable in it's own way, willing to do what's necessary for the goal, but not completely morally bankrupt to do the heinous things in his culture, but whether that will be his gain or his undoing remains to be seen. Also, I read that he's an enjoyer of the fine arts and literature, which-

Oh larvae, it's one of those people. Those who decry the idea of divinity as mere superstition and only believe in their god of science. While his raising of overall productivity is quite an admirable action, you have to forgive me for considering the first fact very much a dealbreaker in me finding him sympathetic. He also seems quite married to his Technocratic Ideology, to the point where I do not know much about him in person, other than that he seems to be quite a bore, or, how the Boss Deliveryworm would call it, a no-fun-allowed guy with a stick up his buttocks. His strive towards a better future is a good one, at the very least.

And how fittingly does its leadership live up to all of Atlantia's greatest hypocrisies. A state supposedly built on liberty, leashed by a man who is no better than a tinpot dictator. This man promises justice for the few corrupt enough to support his illegitimate reign, and generously grants the rest of his nation the choice of silence or the noose, especially for those with the dear misfortune of having been born to the wrong race. This is nothing less than abominable, and there are few greater instances of shame that I can hold in my heart than the knowledge that another world's Whats worse, our population is barely growing.

As for Kaiserin Victora, I like how she's not a spoiled daughter of a monarch but is actually pretty brave, strong, and competent while understanding the gravity of her actions. She didn't sound too happy after killing 100K civilians of the enemy county. She joined the army and used the bomb to stop the war, period. A bit of a militant pacifist I must say. "What is there to dislike about Miss Kaoma Haishi? It is evident to me that we share the same scientific, rational approach to problem solving. Is it not a trait inherent to our profession? I digress, first of all, let me congratulate you with a round of applause. In your time presiding as Sherechia's minister of infrastructure and transportation the large assortment of civil engineering projects finished under your supervision is nothing short of engineering marvels. Often in capitalist societies, you will find public transport woefully underfunded and consequential a disorganized, disconnected hodgepodge of inefficient systems. Such was true for Sherechia as well, until the observant eye of one little girl identified the root cause of the problem. Back then you were merely but a young lass, therefore, your backstory is truly laudable. Fast forward to the present and the people of your nation now have the liberty to ride on quality and timely "Khaigandai" high-speed rail network because a certain young woman identified an issue in society and took positive action for the common good of man.

Concerning your decisions on nuclear plants and hydroelectric dams, they are reasonable on the account that they meet two sound criteria; atomic energy is by far the most potent resource on Earth, generating an outstanding 3 tons of coal equivalence in power for every gram of Uranium-238 liberated through nuclear fission. Diversifying the means of power generation is also beneficial for hydrology is plentiful, harnessing the power of falling water comes with minimal detriment to the natural environment and supplements the existing low-emission infrastructure.

These efforts lead me to believe that you care for the environment and the wellbeing of people. There is a scientific correlation between the longevity of the nation and the domestic power grid's ability to generate electricity. Furthermore, I am a staunch proponent in favour of leaving decision-making to councils of experts and you, Ms Haishi, your actions are a shining example of effective nation-building left in the hands of professional oversight. While politicians babble on till next Sunday about their next campaign in an upcoming election, you are a woman who does not fool around, you get the job done and the masses directly benefit as a result.

There is no questioning that your array of distinguished achievements are in no large part owed to your problem-

"Mr. Estima is quite a peculiar man. He seems to have good intentions for his country, and has made great progress in improving it, yet looking at his past, and how he not only gathers his people to commit despicable acts of ultraviolence on men who meant no physical harm, like a landlord, but seems to continue this into his career, regularly getting into brawls in his own parliament and... trampling his political opponents with elephants.

I could admire him for using his own fists with no need for weapons, but he seems so reckless and angry, threatening his own people so casually in these ways. That anger could easily clutter Inogo's mind, and lead him to make terrible decisions. My only advice to him is this; next time he thinks about physical confrontation in his parliament, he should go home, wait until nightfall, then sit outside in the nude until a mosquito or leech lands on his genitalia. Only then will he know that aggression and violence will not solve everything."

"I find him to be a very intriguing man... he has a grand vision of his nation being a place where technology reigns supreme, and the citizenry are encouraged to introduce their ideas to help the state advance in this manner. He sees that things can be solved by this; however, this idea does have many concerns by me, one of which is that it relies too much on it... and relying too much on a great thing can cost him immensely in the long run. Nonetheless, I commend him for being able to advance his nation this well, and in the end, I feel he will be remembered as a great visionary among his people."

"It would take an individual of even greater moral weakness and dishonor than myself to find disrespect for the old Master...A man of venerable age and experience, having fought and endured a terrible invasion by the Akitsushimans, and earned the right to succeed his predecessor by the worthiness and purity of his character rather than being owed it by bloodline. This is a man that knows war but is peaceable, a theocrat who holds deep faith yet refuses dogmatism, and a fighter that undoubtedly holds the greatest physical power out of anyone in the world yet refuses to utilize it save for the defense of his people. Were he a Trinitarian, his virtues and achievements would almost certainly mark him as a saint..."

Leader - Sing Antonio Montemaggiore, Presidente dalla Repubblica Stanieresa

"A president that came from a military background. that seems to be a common concept among the realms of humans. But the has more of a civilian appeal rather than military, which is in no way a bad thing. One needs to be involved with the general populace to understand the needs of his people, which he seems to do pretty well from what the records show. even then, the military aspects still show in some areas, but only where it needs to be. His policies make plenty sense as well, especially revoking the whole tourist dress code. Can't imagine what they would ever want me to wear if I were to have such a leisurely visit to Stanier, as my wardrobe isn't really compatible with many dress codes of the foreign worlds. I also approve of his mixture of both state-owned and private economic structure. A couple things that bother me is the lack of any environmental opinion. I often like to build my impressions on leaders based on their respect for the natural world, but there is nothing here to show whether or not Sng does. I have also noticed that the later education seems to be something that would have to be paid for. Personally, I feel that education should be a public thing. Regardless of the level of it. It's also nice to know that some leaders can still also have a much less serious side in their personal lives, as it shows that they are still much like everyone else. He sounds like he would be a lot of fun at a more leisurely meeting. Overall, I will keep a fairly positive opinion of him.

Oswald's Status: Alive and well until 1968

From His Imperial Majesty's Personal Journal of Opinions on other Heads of States and Governments

16 September 1931
Thursday

Sitting down with his wife and sipping some sweet tea

My personal thoughts concerning 'Inogo Estima'

"For someone like Estima who styles himself as a forward thinker, his punishment for the crimes of corruption being torture and death is taking his country too many steps backwards. I too hate corrupt politicians and corruption, but as much as I hate those two things, the thought of torturing a politician to death never crosses my mind. That is what a dictator would do to his enemies, not a leader who believes in freedom and progress and is a forward thinker."

"Besides those things, I would like to discuss about his choice of associates, one of them being Atkhal. A civil worker who distracts himself from his duties is someone who clearly does not deserve his position any longer, and yet he is not punished for distracting himself from his civic duties. My question is, 'Why does Estima keep Atkhal in his position when it seems to me, and perhaps, everybody here, that he does not take his post seriously'? He may be his friend, but it is managing the state of affairs for his country in a proper manner is far more important than keeping someone like that boy around, watching films on that strange little device in his hands all day."

-His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of the Imperial Fatherland, Oswald I, but Oswald might be unintentionally hurting someone's feelings and that is not what he is trying to do.

He's just very critical and straight-to-the-point at the moment.

"I always enjoy writing about royalty because unlike politicians, you can almost predict a persons experiences, doctrine, conduct, etcetera, based on their lineage. They're less of a, er, misfired cannonball, I guess. But with the Immoveable Oswald of Hohenheim, this sad, predictable correlation is totally absent. So hear me out. I mean, ascending to the throne at age ten? Young as he may have been, that little 'moment of ennoblement', or whatever, was probably more of a chronological certainty than puberty itself, given who his father and grandfather were. Not that I'm impugning his early rule, no, of course not. I've hired countless hardworking, successful minors in my line of work, and although there's a difference between scraping gum out of a turnstile, and leading what is essentially an entire land army, the same basic concepts of leadership remain the same. A lot was achieved under Oswald's rule, perhaps a little too much, but when you recognize this man's appreciation for expansive industry, innovation, and marshal traditions, it's easy to see why he's been so successful."

"I respect a person who places value in detailed yet straightforward manners of communication. For the lack of a better word, Oswald doesn't waste a single breath, and it's probably the thing I respect most about him. I admire his righteous nature, especially given the power he possesses, and his dedication to the enforcement of law and order set an example for us all. Frankly, it doesn't surprise me that he's so opposed to communism, since most people in history with a genuine dedication to jurisprudence tend to avoid the ideology. That's more of a tidbit I guess; anyways, his social policy is fairly dated, but honestly, given the stability of his leadership, and the natural sensibilities he possesses when it comes to military rule, his people could do far worse. I'm used to royalty being an endless parade of unqualified silver doorknobs, but Oswald knows what he's doing, and he's trying to screw over as few people as possible in the process. And you know what? That's good enough for me."

Kaisertliche Vaterland:

Viktoria, Germanian Empress

"...Would you look at that, it's a small multiverse after all. Not my third time returning to research the figures that come up in these alternate realities and I find a man in almost my exact same position, ruling over a country so dearly similar to mine, within another Tellus...One just as war scarred as mine. This is not going to be an enjoyable read, but Fridericus Rex did not cease his march into Sileska because it became too uncomfortable to continue. Moving onwards..."

"...I exaggerate very little when I say that a man like this might very easily have been able to take my place in my world if I had not been born, and might have been beloved if perceived as a tad eccentric by the commoners and nobility. A social conservative, save for some odd sentiments regarding race I'm sure most of my court would raise eyebrows at him for but to which I am rather ambivalent, but also a modernist who has seen to expanding his Germania's industrial and military strength for better and worse. An Altmärckian pragmatist in the 20th century...Aside from this he is a good, moral man. Well-humored and peaceable by the standards of some of my more disgraceful predecessors, and like me he has a rightful love of literature."

"Beyond this, there are things I can and cannot relate to him on. He had the fortune of being able to actually direct his General Staff in wartime and maintain his authority as an Emperor as opposed to the sorry situation handed down to myself. Yet he does not strike me as a military man, much less as one entirely capable of corraling the General Staff and preventing them from accumulating the same level of power and authority they did in my time. As much as I respect the man, he feels very much like a civilian, jaded though these eyes might be. His choice on his world's Wunderwaffe as well, that devilish horror...Honorable though his decision might have been, I can safely doubt refusing it would prevent further chaos..."

WonderMart:

Viktoria, Germanian Empress

"I'm being asked to evaluate...a store manager? C'est la vie. I suppose one can only gain so much understanding of the world through only looking to crowns and presidents before they start to lose perspective and forget about the people that are say, actually keeping the civilian economy running below them. This should be a good exercise in that, if nothing else."

"Were this a state publication I would need to begin with a denouncement of Atlantian immorality and wanton capitalism, but thankfully that's not exactly a concern to me as of this moment as I am very much not in the mood to act as a propaganda parrot. Instead I can be honest for once. This Kirkman, all things told, is an admirable individual in possession of a good moral compass and a herculean work ethic that cannot be understated. If this information is correct, then this man is all but completely devoted to his job overseeing his sector and all the people working under him, and with the ambition to expand his responsibilities ever further in the future. His efforts would be nothing short of amazement...if the utter mundanity of managing a retail establishment did not ultimately come back to the forefront of my thoughts and erode much of the high excitement I felt reading through this profile, and if his high ideals and indomitable spirit were not so constrained by his environment..."

"Do not misunderstand, I very much like this man, and I empathize greatly with his struggles reading this, but some cynical part of me feels as though he's simply being treated like a workhorse by those above him and that they may not give him the opportunities for advancement he is ultimately looking for. Even with the sacrifices he has ultimately had to make for the survival of his career and everyone else's at his location...But this man does feel he has a purpose there, and far be it for me to stop a man attempting to further it. I hope he does succeed, well and truly. Although I really didn't expect to get this sentimental over the story and times of a retail manager."

QUOTE

"This is the second fucking time that I'm writing on anime girl German leaders. Seriously, what in the name of Lady Liberty does Germany have to do with anime girls? Okay, it's Germania. Whoop dee fucking doo. It's just the 2nd Reich mixed with the 3rd Reich's borders. I hope to god that they're not also magical like those two girls.

Anyways, onto the bitch herself, so basically she is from some odd world that is a lot like our own, except with the nations having slightly different names. Britain is Albion. Germany is Germania. France is Gallia. Well, I didn't really expect her to participate in the world's version of World War 1. After all, I don't think any of the Hohenzollerns participated in World War 1 despite the Prussian Militarist image. Yes, it was in a support as opposed to a combat role, presumably because she was a woman in the early 20th century. But still, the age of monarchs directly participating in battles was far gone by the early 20th century. Then again, I guess it could be different in her timeline.

World War 1 starting in the 1920s is interesting too, and...Wait, they had a NUKIE by the end of the 'Weltkrieg'?! I don't even know if the 1920s would've been nearly as technologically advanced as it was in our timeline if World War 1 didn't happen, since WW1 was a rude awakening for European armies that were stuck in the 19th century militarily. And, I don't know if a single 6 year war would've led to the development of nuclear weapons. And, boo hoo on being 'traumatized' by dropping a nuke purposely on a civilian center. Like what were you thinking? That bombing a city with an experimental weapon was going to NOT lead to atrocities? Own it, bitch. You did it to terrorize Albion into surrendering to prevent them from invading Europe, plain and simple.

Admittedly, I do feel regrets over how I handled the Great Bush War, especially considering the lives lost due to the nuclear strikes launched by the Azanians on major cities in South Africa. Though, I guess that is more on my competence as a military commander than humanitarian reasons. Really, I don't feel regrets over what I did during the 2nd American Civil War.

But yes, I noticed a contradiction between her self-professed disliking for the brutality of war and the fact that she pretty much does whatever the world's version of the Prussian militarists want her to do, even taking into account the change in her views due to her involvement with the war. She may say over and over again that war is horrid, yet she allowed militarists such as Hotzendorf to effectively rule the government. She even aided in the creation of a Germanian dominated order in the world's version of Europe.

Honestly, it is quite tragic that there always seems to be a world war between the various European nations in even alternate timelines. The elites of those nations force the common person to fight their wars, when we should instead follow the principle of national self-determination and have all the European nations coexist peacefully. If we did that in my timeline, things would've been

As for her politics, there really is nothing I can say since she is apolitical beyond her goal of entrenching Germanian power. I guess it is interesting that there are no national-liberals in this version of the Kaiserreich. Also, the Social-Democrats historically in my timeline were fine with the war effort, albeit they opposed the military dictatorship of Ludendorff. And, I don't know what Aminist Trinitarianism is. Is it Aminianism? Like the reformed Christian doctrine? It seems like the data is incomplete for her and her nation.

Anyway we can agree a lot here, f!ck the 5 day work week, that 4 day system is more efficient, often you can get 8 hours of work done in 4 with a bit of proper scheduling and management, that's 4 hours that you can use for either more work or enjoying life. Getting competent people in the government, that's a good idea, a lot of our neighbours have stunted growth for hiring the wrong people for the job, universal basic income, brilliant, it keeps people off the streets and mugging your house, sounds expensive but the reduce police department costs counterbalances it, autarky? excellent, now the capitalist imperialists can't get us with their sanctions to "liberate" the people.
