In retrospect, I might have confused parts of TAR with the slew of other American Template nations. I'll apologize for that, but that's kinda one of the problems with the generic clones, they'll do blend together and are hard to keep apart unless they do something really special.

Also, if I see someone put more effort into their posts, I am perfectly willing to give credit where it is due.

Difference between mine and most is I actually put effort into my lore and am still trying to develop/improve it. The TAR is a major project that will take months to complete, so, there's a lot to do.

Yet it is still nothing more than a rightwank super US. There is nothing really that keeps it apart from all the other rightwank super US's. Like seriously, other than you writing more, there is nothing that is memorable about it. No interesting concepts, just some rather embarrassing right-wing power fantasy.

"rightwank" sure buddy, ok

also don't really care if you find it memorable. I just care about my interest and my worldbuilding.

Anyway, not gonna waste my energy arguing with someone who hates my project.

this is an entirely valid point but if you post regularly in the F7 threads that you post regularly in you can reasonably expect people to read your lore. if reading your lore becomes a chore then accepting feedback from people who think so is a fairly reasonable attitude

I feel like it's important for the "effortposter" community to remember their roots. (Full disclosure: I do not consider myself one since I generally stay off F7 anyway, but I run a Discord server with a lot of people who like this board so I know what I'm talking about.) You do have people like Texkentuck, ZN, Free Ravensburg, etc.; the kind of posters where you have to ask yourself "why are these people even here" who make up let's say 50% of the population, and you've got the kind that post three times before getting bored and leaving that's about 20%. In the 30% that's left, you have committed posters like ValZ, Synne, Foehn, Wormfodder, Hyrule, Las Palmeras/TSP, Kiu Ghesik, Batavia, Tsaivao and many others who occupy a beloved niche in the community and are a reliable source of fantastic content. The problem, in my opinion, is that there are some people among us who see that collective 50% as uniformly irredeemable and forever destined to be shit. This is a valid position though only mostly true. I say "mostly true" because occasionally you can find users like Langenia who were accepted by the community, got some mentorship, and got a lot better at RPing. That's what we need to do: find users with potential and help them use it effectively. We were all noobs once, so ask yourself if you'd want to be shit on by a community you genuinely wanted to be a part of.

Gandoor wrote:

Really at the end of the day the biggest problem is that people just take this game way too seriously.

This is an extremely basic and satirical web game based on some Aussie dude's (honestly not that good) political satire novel that just happened to gain an audience of fuckin-losers people interested in politics, nation building, etc. because the basic nature of the gameplay itself meant that they could develop their nations as they wanted on the discussion forums.

It ain't that serious folks.

This is also an important thing to remember. It's just a game, my dudes/dudettes/spiritually dudelike nonbinary entities. We're just here to have fun and share our brainrot with other creative types. Why be such a spoilsport?

TL;DR take a chill pill and be kind to one another.

I think there's a pretty clear gap between someone like Free Ravensburg and typical summer posters, FR actually has put effort into his own lore, he's just not that great in F7. I think that's a sign of potential, so while I think he can be annoying, I still personally see potential for good things to come out of him.

But like if your nation is 5 generic factbooks with 1-5 sentences and you're making one word posts gtfo no patience for that, not sorry

Your lore is undeniably "rightwank", I mean you have a German Africa and the main political power in the USA is a nationalist party with Donald Trump as president and I think there's like 2 liberal/leftist things in general I saw. That is pretty blatantly "rightwank" let's not kid ourselves here

^^^ this thread's first post has a LOT of very good guides on military worldbuilding within the context of actual modern militaries. Though you're PMT (?) so it might not apply as much -- the basics still hold true though.

A lot of people genuinely get upset at the situation at hand (and quite justifiably) at how a lot of the lore-posting threads in F7 (and indeed, this is what a lot of F7 is about nowadays) appear to be full of comparatively low-effort nations taking only a cursory glance at the nation above (despite a desire for feedback or at the very least some mid-tier RP) and posting one-line responses. Where this meets a line is the deliberate isolation of a group known as "summies" and shitting on them whenever possible. That's just elitist snobbery and can only lead to more insularity on the part of self-declared "effortposters".

Though frankly there's very little the mods can do, or want to do, about this issue, so at the end of the day it's just part of life on F7.

Personally I don't really mind wank-nations that much. Sure, make your nation a real life country but stonk, whatever, I don't care. My real problem with these kind of nations is that the geopolitical situation can be pretty boring in them. These wank-nations doesn't really have credible opposition that can make the world more interesting. Internal opposition either doesn't seem to exist or are incompetent caricatures. External opposition meanwhile seems to be completely steamrolled in a war that the wanked nation easily won. I mean for crying out loud, give your nation an actual challenge to overcome. Hell, have aliens invade your planet, I don't care, just create an interesting conflict that is an actual challenge for your nations, because otherwise your setting becomes pretty boring.

Personally I don't really mind wank-nations that much. Sure, make your nation a real life country but stonk, whatever, I don't care. My real problem with these kind of nations is that the geopolitical situation can be pretty boring in them. These wank-nations doesn't really have credible opposition that can make the world more interesting. Internal opposition either doesn't seem to exist or are incompetent caricatures. External opposition meanwhile seems to be completely steamrolled in a war that the wanked nation easily won. I mean for crying out loud, give your nation an actual challenge to overcome. Hell, have aliens invade your planet, I don't care, just create an interesting conflict that is an actual challenge for your nations, because otherwise your setting becomes pretty boring.

Yeah, a functional antagonist that is at the very least a constant thorn in the side of your nation is something that elevates a story. Like the Birds for the Worms, the Old Hylian politics for the Onox Legion, etc.
