Anime hentai is modern art and it is objectively the pinnacle of human artistic achievement. That's why modern art can't suck and why it is the pinnacle of human artistic achievement because anime hentai is modern art.

UNESCO should list "Anime Hentai Culture" as part of Japan's Intangible Cultural Heritage. After all 7 decades have already passed so its now an important cultural tradition.

If we're going into semantics, "Modern Art" are works of art produced between 1860 and 1970. Especially art styles like Metaphysical, Impressionism, Surrealism, Cubism, and Modernism. What people are usually referring to when they describe "Modern Art" is either abstract art (which has always existed), contemporary art (there's a difference), or Postmodernism. Though, all have the general idea of "We shouldn't have to make art to the standards of what society thinks art should be." This is why, I think, there's such a big push back because it does break expectations and while this sometimes leads to praise and new types of art - other times it leads to condemnation for being too strange. (Sometimes rightfully so, frickin Andy Warhol)

I personally wouldn't consider most modern animations contemporary art then (especially the ones that only exist to make a profit like Family Guy, 90% of Cartoon Network's stuff, or 90% of Animes), but I am not a pretentious art nerd either, I just took notes in my high school art class.

In hindsight it is interesting to mention, because a lot of the groundbreaking stuff was experimenting with artistic conventions that were well-established elsewhere. The Impressionists were massive weebies and Cubism took a lot of cues from primitive art, just to make a few examples. Which once again, leads me to suspect that a lot of people who whine about Modern Art are the types that'd whine about anything not "traditionally" Western. Though maybe, I'm just being overly cynical thanks to the crap that mouth-breathers with Greco-Roman bust PFPs tend to post online.

Though, tbh, I always find it funny to think about how people like that would view the interlude between Classical Antiquity and the Renaissance, as it's clear that a lot of Medieval European art roughly resembles Modern art in the sense that it wants to convey emotions and ideas more so than it wants to flawlessly represent reality. WHiCh WaY wEsTeRn MaN?!

some don't look at how many pages the thread has, others just think they have the right to have fun and to bring their best one-liner not realising the time stamps say 12 eons ago and that all have move on part of the blame may go to the antiquated style of online forums, looks confusing to newcomers who are more accustomed to social media layouts (and probably expect nsforums to look a bit like reddit)

then again, we all want our voices heard when we see anything of interest

When an FT nations get involved in the "how do YN a soldiers think about fighting AN soldiers" it's one of the three- they defeat everyone and emerge victorious, they simply ignore lower-teched nations or these nations kill thmselve (something I do) because that's basically our way of one final "fuck you" to the invaders

Yes, or the ones who barely watch the video.

Because I at least try to watch it in whole, unless it's super, super long (like half-hour plus) then I try to cut through and summarize the video best I can... Especially if it's talking about a location. But if it's something like an anime episode or a film, I'd rather pass on it entirely because that's just excessive.
