Voluntarily, from expatriation and exile (e.g., Leaves the country at the start of the war, and renounces citizenship) to publicly side with the enemy), to
Execution. (e.g., defrauds nation by pretending to be loyal Citizen or lawful Soldier , but willfully and knowingly undermines the nation in such a way that a national citizen or trooper is endangered of life or limb, or dies.

Coerced, from
No Punishment (e.g., Gun stuck to head of captured civilian who is marched to a work camp to make munitions against their will that harms or kills nation's troops and has no opportunity to resist or escape)

1-5 years hard labor] to life of hard labor -- sometimes execution (e.g., captured civilian who works as a useful stooge for the enemy just to ease one's capture above and beyond that of other interned persons that would have otherwise been tolerable (to be judged by a jury of fellow captured civilians) .

Sitting in the middle of you nation's busiest thoroughfare blocking traffic (or otherwise sufficiently blocking the flow by whatever means of conveyance to which your nation is accustomed) for some radical notion that may or may not be existentially imminent?

Depending on circumstances it will result in sentence up to 4 years.

During sentencing for an assault and battery, the defendant just jumps and tackles the judge and punches him/her and bailiff several times.

Depends on the top.
Human sacrifice? Probably an "intense rehabilitation program" (prison) for life.
Sacrifice for the greater good is totally supported.

Significant time in rehabilitation facility, if first violent offense, if not, then even more rehabilitation. Oh and of course corporal punishment for offense as well.

Assuming the person who was forced to kill was completely innocent of other crimes and their life was in danger, they will be acquitted and the person who forced them will be punished for aggravated murder and face a life sentence. However, if both the one who forced to kill and the de facto killer were committing another crime (for example a robbery) both will be sentenced for murder.
