While he can pass as a jovial man, the relatively short monarch of Diarcesia often faces a struggle to reach out to other people and often feels that he is alone in his plane of existence.

Just like what occurred IRL in some places, the Atlantic slave trade and the Triangular system (America/Caribbean-Europe-Africa) lost momentum after a shift towards industrialization.

They are humans that have colonized the moon after an extinct event took place on Earth. They were initially supposed to use the moon as a base to launch into Mars but they decided to stay and colonize. There is also a population of "Imps" which are Humans only 4 to 5 feet tall.

Their entire nation is, in essence, a populist (framed within a reactionary monarchic flavor) response to the rise of a nationalist Hindu-oriented administration in a near-present iteration of India.

New Valhalla was granted independence after its colonial overlord, Dania (or Denmark, I should say?) fought many wars in Europe which left its economy and military in ruins. The Danes were then poorer than their colonial subjects and it was determined that Dania could no longer afford to maintain the colony, so the two signed a mutual agreement which resulted in the independence of New Valhalla. The Valhalls rapidly industrialised their country afterwards.

I'm surprised that anyone noticed that. Basically, the big clump of indigenous reservations the straddle the Utah-Colorado-New Mexico-Arizona borders all declared independence and formed a loose federation called 'Diné'tah'.

They are an island nation off the Pacific coast of South America. Their Indigenous people existed for around 60000 years before coming into contact with Europeans. They gained independence from the British after a successful coup during WW1, and became communist during the cold war.

My history teacher explained something about a land in India called Deccan in class once, that's why your name kinda rang a bell in my brain. Anyways.

The sultanate is comprised of 12 provinces. They have two national languages, Urdu (or a dialect specific to Deccan) and Arabic. The name Arshanid actually refers to their founder and name of the dynasty while Deccan refers to their location.

Though already a multi-cultural society centuries before, the AD considers that more variety was added when a more modern (after the 1940s) wave of immigration from Muslims from India came to their country. Ironically when they became independent at the same time, many non-Muslims left them....This is the law of equivalent exchange.

As a people they can trace their origin back to the Tohorinese Empire and are the only native ethnicity in the Americas to negotiate vassalage to Spain rather than be conquered, destroyed and absorbed. As a state, they have been ruled by their Conservative Party for more than a century now.

Their citizens see the navy as culturally important as it is connected to the Vikings. The navy itself is decently sized with 50,000 personnel (droids included) and 25 ships including 2 helicopter carriers and 2 destroyers. This allows for regional control over the waters but cannot effectively work as a bluewater navy as the rest of the forces consist of mainly patrol vessels and gunboats.

Their nations foundations begin with failed attempts by the British throughout the 18th to 20th century to build and maintain bases on the island. The attempts failed due to horrible weather which seems to be the common climate in the region. The Nazi's during WW2 managed to pave a runway on the Isles but it was quickly destroyed by British artillery. (really nice homepage by the way)

An interesting premise. The historical basis for the independence of this nation very much reminds me of the historical events which happened around Bangladesh becoming its own state. Only this time the situation are rather reverse, with intervention coming from the Muslim World and nation, rather than India.

That healthcare providers in New Transeurasia are all private enterprises, though New Transeurasia's national healthcare system ensures universal and free access for all. Also, it appears as though this healthcare system, the NSZ, also sells recreational drugs, as evidenced by the "discount prices" for said drugs through the NSZ Platinum service.
