"Blitzkrieg" is a British propaganda term that was never found in any Wehrmacht manual ever, other than as a commentary on how "this word is dumb".

And the general strategy of "use a thunderlike strike using armoured columns to both quickly encircle enemy forces and demoralise them" is pretty much a no-brainer when you have tanks. A modern NS calling their tactics "Blitzkrieg" is... tacky, to say the least, but let's not pretend that Shock and Awe as the US used it in both Gulf Wars was anything else in practice.

I have a pair of characters who are confirmed married, and the rest... is up to your interpretation, anyway. 🤔

Don't need the whole "100 meter tall Valentian looking for suitor."

The most recent one is trying to force a harem fetish but now in Japan. I just don't understand the point of any of this.

Now that you mention it, I actually have one character who's confirmed married as well.

I just noticed in the Japanese harem fetish RP he listed one of the requirements as "not a slut." That's gonna be a yikes from me dawg.

It's only a matter of time before some nation joked around and said "What do you have against slugs?"

A nation of snail people, now that's something I have not seen... yet. And I didn't mean anthropomorphic snails. I mean actual nation consisting of the animal kingdom.

I entered a marriage RP to test out how to characterize my protagonist and because F7 was getting slow. I feel like they're a poster-child for the Dunning-Kruger Effect as they're surrounded by plotting nobles socially smarter than them most of the time.

I'm liking RPing though, it's full of surprises and I'm grateful all the other players think things through.

On that note, I wanna ask: Is there a marriage RP that went relatively successful, but the suitor / bachelor / lady in question was a spy/assassin/whoever else that was all intent on killing the lonely dude?

Cue tales of romance interspersed with botched-up assassination attempts. Why yes, that funny-smelling wine is for you.

Even better idea: they're sent to kill their partner, but actually do end up falling in love with them.

Even though I've only recently been here, I've never seen anything like it. So much so that the OP rule that says: "I don't want killings or fights of any kind during the party; you're not on" International Incidents "!" it should be a cliché.

People have done this stuff before or tried to pull off a sneaky terrorist attack. That's why it has to be in the rules for those types of threads.

This is the first time I've entered a marriage/courtship RP. Frozen Forest has prohibited people killing each-other so party crashing seems to be a common thing in those RPs, if it's anything to go by.

The spin you take is very interesting and I've never seen it in RPs though. You did roughly describe the IC status of the sinking ship that's the Palmeran Royal family though. Or the plans I roughly had for it before giving up in disgust.

So I imagine that what Valentine suggested can only happen by mutual agreement between two players, with the only surprise between the participants.

Tbh it isn't very common amongst actually decent rps. It's just that most OPs don't wanna deal with the fallout of their party blowing up on them, and guests/other ppl's characters dying on their watch I think.

Truth be told, I actually do agree with that. I would love an action-filled dinner party, but it didn't went that well the first time (I did two of them - the first one was... ohh boy), and I would really hate to see people dying in Val Z.

Plus it will ruin the carpets.

Do RPer's regularly accept their characters dying at the actions of another player or do god-modding arguments flare up from that? Regardless, it's sort of a no-brainer that people who make civil diplomacy or marriage RPs aren't intentionally looking to make it a John Woo film.

Wait, nvm, Valentine Z is John Woo.
