It's the same as when some pornspammer would come in and everyone and there mother would come in to report it while also bemoaning how corrupted their pure virgin eyes have become by seeing a penis.

Ironical given how many of said posters have characters that exist for horny posting.

It seems that in RPs that talk about state visits it is undeniable that most of the players fail to get beyond the "leader who lands at the airport, says he is very happy to be here" and then what else?

Why is it so difficult to get anything done, other than say hello and send good wishes?

I mean, if it's a private RP between a small number of actors it normally goes well and ends up making a good, albeit short, story. In real life state visits are either meant to improve relations or have emergency diplomatic reasons, neither of which exactly makes sense in an NS RP? I think?

What do you mean?

What I'm saying is that most players don't go beyond getting their leader to the host country, after which they will certainly have writer's block.

Same goes for war RPs. Most will stop when troops disembark. After that, they won't know how to continue.

I get past that but in a pub RP I ended up being shoved aside.

Also for war I tend to try to follow doctrine or push past through any means necessary, but then the OP stalls and cocks up in that regard so I'm stuck sitting there, asking "okay, I'm in the area, we cleared a hot landing area, secured a path for logistics, we are pushing in... Now what?"

That or the hostile country being invaded nukes themselves (Vikanian war) and hence all I'd do is the first strike from the air and later an amphibious invasion... That adds up to a grand empty feeling of disappointment because the hostile country pulled a Belka.

In fact, it even matters when the OP itself doesn't move forward, as if it has lost interest after only a few posts. Barring really necessary IRL reasons, they kill RPs quite heavily.

I hate it. Currently I have one big RP rolling, or was rolling, but it seems people dipped. Regardless I try to punch in at least semi-daily posts to roll up everything into a neat little package, waiting on others to toss in their input before deciding to move on.

Because people probably don't know what happens in state visits. And don't know that it's often not only the heads of state meeting.

Okay, but no one here claims to be a top expert on diplomatic moves! That is, unless there really is some ambassador really playing NS. However, at this point, you are faced with a game that does not claim reality. Play, invent, shoot! The beauty is also this!

Anyone else annoyed by those nations who straight-up lack or refuse to make a proper military factbook and then suddenly jump into a war thread or attempt to and later succeed in declaring war against another nation...

... Only to turn the whole RP into a crapfest of godmodding without restraint as the nation without any backing for their military somehow rolls even technologically superior nations per their background, respectively?

How does that work? Wouldn't it be really easy for the thread OP to just tell them they can't participate until they get a military, or just treat the nation as an empty plaine in terms of soldiers?

That's how it should go, but OPs seem to disregard that entirely. Especially if the OP lacks any military info themselves, then it just gets worse from there with stupid inflated deployments like "I am sending 2 million infantry, 25,000 tanks and 70,000 aircraft plus 5 million ships" with complete disregard for how much of a chore that would be to get every last man and bit of gear plus the vehicles themselves into the AO and get the whole operation rolling.

Note, while I see at most 10k infantry being somewhat manageable, that is still bordering on lunacy for me, personally. Plus falling back to <http://www.broomdces.com/nseconomy/> for some mild idea of military management is quite useful, but it doesn't actively give a solid idea of reserves or military equipment. Sure, a nation may have 1 billion infantry, but for all we care about 99% of them are reserves with 1% being active duty, then from the reserves only 10% can be mobilized as a standing army.
