elitism? nah, they're just a shitty band.

(plus they're not even metalcore; they're commercial-post-hardcore with glam metal thrown in for extra marketability so they aren't just 100% sleeping with sirens clones)

e: also this is probably a topic for a different thread

Nah. We discuss various silly things in here on a regular basis, and nobody seems to really care.

Sure, the General Music Discussion thread, or the Metal Music Discussion Thread may be the best of places, but it isn't that big of a deal, as far as I have seen.

But.... Wiki says they are also metalcore... and so do the elitists on Metallum.

If anything, I would say Falling In Reverse is post-hardcore/metalcore, which still makes it metalcore, in the same way that death/black is still black metal. Now I will listen to that song again, because it is a good one.

post-hardcore is not metalcore. -.-

post-hardcore is hardcore taken in another direction. metalcore is a blend of extreme metal and hardcore. there is a difference and it is a vast one.

some bands do play a mix of both styles, yes, but fir's only similarity is the screamed vocals - aside from that they're just another commercial post-hardcore (i.e. popcore/crabcore) outfit

(And I can't find FIR's metallum profile. care to link it for me? On the metallum forums it's just people laughing at how terrible radke's songwriting is)

As long as your post includes what you are listening to, it's legit. ☐

They aren't on metallum because FIR isn't Metal. :/
Slipknot was on Metallum for a while, but it was recently removed.
Disturbed isn't on there either.

When I browsed the Metallum forum, most people categorized FIR as metalcore in some way. I do concede that it's likely post-hardcore with metalcore influences, but that doesn't explain why the Wikipedia says it is post-hardcore and metalcore. It does sound kind of metalcorish, honestly.

Wikipedia is damn inaccurate when it comes to genres. It's quality can range from editors with a hardon for changing "Z is an Xian Y band" to just "Z is an Xian rock band" because they think every genre with guitars in is rock and nothing else; to listing every single influence the band has had (i.e. a grunge band did a single song with hip hop samples and now rap rock and alternative hip hop have been added)

At the end of the day, it what it sounds like to your ear, I guess, but I'm without doubt that FIR's metalcore-ness extends only as far as Radke's vocals.
