Nemo's Mood: Snide and sharply critical

"He really does stand as a testament of lunacy, mental derangement, and failed artistry. If I had to pick one cherry, and put that one cherry in a basket, based on his delusions of his followers as a demigod and every single thing he has done so terribly wrong, there will be millions of cherries placed in that one basket. Now it has become a hobby of mine to cherry-pick people such as this so-called 'Patron', and the hobby still entertains me as much as playing with Boomer. If only the people, who have prevented him from bashing his skull in with his already messed up mindset, left him alone to die, he would had never become the paragon of the absolute worst kinds of people we all see before us today."

some disgruntled programmer who took off the safeguards on the damned thing? Excellent. Just bloody marvellous. The so-called 'Paramount' was much better off being the 'glorified historical textbook' it was intended to be, not be tampered by the government who thought it'd be a great idea to program it with sentience and much more. Should it have been done that way, we would not have gotten to know the Paramount, including those band of maniacs who back it, the way everyone, including myself, we now see before our eyes and in our minds. In other words, now that I think about...we should all shift our blame on that one idiot programmer, they are the one who is to blame for bringing everyone...this."

"I wonder if she is self-aware of her criminal misdeeds. Numerous violations of the Geneva Covenant seems to have taken a toll on Northern Ateria and the mental state of their respective leader. I do hope there is a morally distinguishable endgoal to justify this long list of terror. Certainly that is what the Empress wants, correct? Justification for her crimes? Or is 'reconquest' all that she is interested in, even if it compromises the homeland itself?"

"Despite our best efforts, neither I nor any of our diplomats were able to retrieve much information about President Jaye in time for this interview. We only know two things about him, which is that he is legally mandated to rule for life, and neither he nor any of his political subordinates are elected. As a basic believer in the principle of democracy, it is an understatement to say that I find this a serious failure of the regime's duties as a government. A failure of Jaye or his subordinates to govern effectively will be met not with a new mandate for change, but only a continued mandate for failure. Additionally, we know with certainty that a small cadre of politicians, including the President's brother, which run multiple ministries and branches of government at the same time, forming a seriously acute breeding ground for corruption on two different levels. We have virtually no information about Jaye's tenure as president at the moment, and as such I cannot form an objective opinion on his performance, but as a Prime Minister and as an Antarctic, I oppose profoundly and vehemently the regime that insulates him so resolutely from the accountability of his governance."
