Russia never sold Alaska and as a result, they later declared their independence during the Russian revolutions. Then, during the Cold War, they became a crucial buffer state between the USA and USSR. Currently, they're the only Russian-speaking nation outside of the former Soviet Union.

In the Interwar Period; Japan, Thailand, and Majapahit formed what is basically like an Entente Cordiale in Asia with close economic and military cooperation. As much as I nut to that idea, I think it's a bit of a pipe dream that Majapahit could stay independent for a country that large and strategically important unlike Thailand. But hey, I am the creator of Ancap Chile so anything goes.

Patagonia recognizes polygamy, but as long as all the members of the harem (what the fuck) are over 18 years old. Even patagonia doesn't tolerate p'dos, glad to know. Either way, other bizarre policies of Patagonia include a purge-like situation every week mandated by the government where people can protest as violently as they like. Patagonians are legally mandated to own a weapon. They can own RPGs as well.

However, it was not very influenced by Spanish culture unlike the Philippines. Imperial Japan took control at the end of the 19th century, but lost control to the Americans during WWII. After that, there was a civil war between Monarchists, Communists, and Liberals, with the Liberals winning and increasing ties with the US and western bloc.

The guiding ideology of the country (Vosak) is a far-right one based on nationalism, traditionalism (more like reactionism), and individualism. It is also associated with a form of martial arts known as Saokun.

The government is a constitutional monarchy but the monarch has a lot more power instead of just being a symbol. The economy is based on national guilds.

This version of Yugoslavia went under the rule of Tito's son Alexander, who brought in reforms making it into a highly benevolent dictatorship, this also prevented Serbian nationalists from gaining power (on account of the Yugoslavists maintaining control this time), thus preserving Yugoslavia for the new century.
