I'm not entirely sure where you should start with Tom Waits, Magma, but you could give Hell Broke Luce a chance. He's...quite unique, and different, so it may not be like the style of blues rock you're used to. I think he incorporates quite a bit of other things in with it, too.

Tom Waits-Georgia Lee

Even though I enjoy Tom Waits, there's definitely songs that are the most highlights, and after about an hour of the album, it does start feeling a little elongated with filler tracks...

Edit: If I actually focused on lyrics more it might be different, though.

Ew, just heard one of the new Lily Allen tracks on a Spotify advertisement. That sounds terrible. The effects on the voice just make it worse...And I thought her one song was at least tolerable...

That mixtape felt really long, even though it was only an hour and eleven minutes...

8/10 for it. It picked up at the end.

That's around the length of most of the stuff I listen to, I think. It isn't until stuff is 1h 20min that I'm like, "Geez, when is this going to end!"

Yeah, wasn't sure what you'd think of it.

Not even sure that songs actually blues rock.

Jonsi and Alex-Happiness

Jonsi and Alex-Indian Summer

Jonsi is the lead singer for the band Sigur Ros, and Alex is his boyfriend who does various things, too. I forgot what band he's a part of, and he also did work with Jonsi's solo project. Very ambient album by the two of them.

Maybe as a secondary genre, or some blues rock incorporated into it.
