A hefty fine and a few weekends of public service. If anyone catches a disease or gets poisoning it may result in either an imprisonment at least and death penalty at worse

Accidentally strafing group of civilians? They have been given enough time to leave the premises of a fully legitimate military target under an aerial attack but instead stayed behind

Nothing. You made reasonable effort to save the civilians. They assumed the risk.

Smells like 50 years in prison and or death sentence.

Causing a major mutiny within the nation's military over the condition of food rations.

Depending on they type of the mutiny. If it was something like some of the IRL protests of the Royal Navy personnel, it's no violence directed at the officers and the mutineers performing most of their jobs, the officer responsible might be hanged alongside some of his subordinates, some of the leaders of the mutineers might get around 10-20 lashes as a preemptive measure

If it was more like revolts in the Russian imperial army with soldiers outright going hostile on other units or their superiors then they're likely to be decimated, nearly all of the CO's are going to be hanged alongside some of the dan members of the officers responsible.

Hitting up on your commanding officer? (Note- in many militaries that's classified as fraternization and is illegal)

Depends on the circumstances. It's legal if it was self defence, but otherwise you'd probably be looking at around two years in jail.

Dear god, how do I explain this?

You get castrated and your hands removed surgically for flogging. We call this punishment, "The Conservative Punishment", since it's one of the most lenient punishments in Lemsrow, we have WAAAAAAAY worse punishments.

Accidentally set fire to a major power plant causing major blackouts in multiple densely populated areas, likely to kill a few people within hospitals or on the streets due to the traffic lights no longer working and life support cutting out.

Probably a fine. Hardliners would insist on the sharia punishment for theft as well, but that is only deployed in extreme and rare circumstances.
