I think the point is they're always the exact same things, often done to be edgy for the sake of being edgy.

Well yeah. That's an issue; but one that's well-known. I still don't see how doing things for the sake of an international reaction is a problem -- certainly it is not without precedence.

But my point is not that you don't have to attract the attention of other players or that you can't post in II, but the constant presentation of the same problem within your country making it seem like the only thing you can propose! Why would you have to open dozens of threads for each "LGBT demonstration that ended up in the bloodbath" when the maximum RP that will be created will be the condemnation letters? And it will be a cyclical thing that will happen every time you do it.

At this point why not open a news thread where you can communicate what you want without sounding too repetitive.

My rule of thumb is generally to only allude to sexual material and ONLY if it serves to actually advance the plot, unfortunately many use it as a forum to homypost or have borderline cybersex... which... why NS of all places?
