This 16 minute melodic death metal song isn't bad at all for its length.

Well, I hope she's got a good manager.
The first time I heard "Royals" by her, I thought it was Justin Beiber...so I'm a bit iffy about her so far.

Well, I hope she's got a good manager.

The first time I heard "Royals" by her, I thought it was Justin Bieber...so I'm a bit iffy about her so far.

I keep hearing her mentioned, from a friend, Anthony Fantano, and so on about being fairly good (Though some of her beats maybe being a little bland and she has more potential in the future to be eve better if she so chooses), but I don't know if she's really "my thing" or not. Pop isn't hugely my thing in general so yeah. I'm still thinking of giving her album a try.

My friend called her "hip-hop and pop", which seems kind of appropriate to me.

I have an innate dislike for hip-hop, but when I listen to "Royals", my ears go "NO, MORE. GIMME MORE."

The way the tone of the vocals switches between minor and major for the verses and chorus is pretty brilliant, I think. Plus, the actual lyrics seem to run counter to mainstream hip hop culture.

Chris Thile started recording with Sugar Hill records when he was a wee lad (he was 13, I think, when his first solo album came out, but he was probably with them before that), and he's certainly not worse for wear.

I'm involving into hip-hop and pop both a lot more as of late.

So I'm listening to this song repeatedly. Not a bad sign.

God, it's 100 times better than that terrible song. I hate that song for some reason.
