You and i are not so different Anatoly , we both joined the military at a young age granted you did join because of conscription and i joined out of desperation and we are both fighting a great enemy although your enemy could be of use to me. Your compassion is pointless as there is a point to suffering and before you ask i will not tell you the point, it wouldn't be fun if i told you. Also if you are unhappy with your position i would be delighted to welcome you to the Reich could give you an entire planet as a gift but you would need to go too some surgeries done as having a terran managing a world would be bad for my public image. I do admire your strength, fighting for a broken cause in a broken world for a semi-broken leader, if i was in your position i would have fled the planet a long time ago. Do consider my offer i am serious about it.

"One can see the irony in someone such as myself calling another a tyrant but this man kills just to kill. He oppresses without reason and conquers purely because he can. The people of his nation and numerous others throughout the universe suffer because of his imperialist policies. Everything, and I do mean everything, about him makes me sick to the core. Never in my life did I think I would meet someone as cold and irredeemable. Clearly, I was mistaken. All I can wish is an ill fate upon him, hopefully one where his own people rise up to end his reign of terror."-Marcus Auron-Sirus

"Such strong and centralized leadership is admirable, taking grand steps to solve each and every of your nation's problems, it would be great if you actually spent time reading Marxist-Leninist-Maoist literature and used it as a guide for a people's revolution against your nation's bourgeoisie, instead you didn't do anything to those leeches and did the disastrous large step policy? What were you thinking? Why didn't you spare the workers and drag those fat cats at gunpoint to the factories and farms and spare the working class for once? And the Republic Leader Policy? Excellent idea but why stop at the old government when you can also target those leeches in the upper class?

Wait... oh wait, you don't like communism... wait, this is just fascism now this is. YOU!"

"Admittedly the crazy Maoist has a point, but I still wouldn't justify your actions here, repressing political freedoms is one thing but telling the whole country to work overtime is just slavery with extra steps, admittedly its temporary but was the situation really that desperate? Yeah come to think about it maybe you should have spared the old government for extra labor."

"How disappointing to be blessed with such charisma, only to waste it preaching for a foreign man and selfishly trying to turn oneself into an idol, something he hasn't earned. He's a political animal, consuming dogma and breathing rhetoric, I know many like him here in Shuraya, cultists without a god, untrustworthy and miserable. I'd rather shove a drill in my ear than put up with the shit you politic-addicts spew. Besides this, as a follower of Istar I congratulate San Huru for his marriage and raising of children, these are sacred things and hallmarks of a true man. A hallmark I fear he might lack is loyalty to his nation. I'm sure in his politic-addled mind he sees himself as a true patriot, but it looks like he loves his ideology and grandeur more than his kin. He would do well not to betray Inugu Estima."

"Finally, a decent folk in this forsaken place. Sylvia Dellamorte, a warriress, mage and grasper of her own destiny, causing much destruction on her foes. Also a survivor, which is very admirable.

Their state is similar to mine, general Onox's, with their use of various species and she is a capable Leader and General, I, General Onox, would love to meet her and her sister on the battlefield one day and bring forth our, General Onoxes and theirs, mutual destruction!

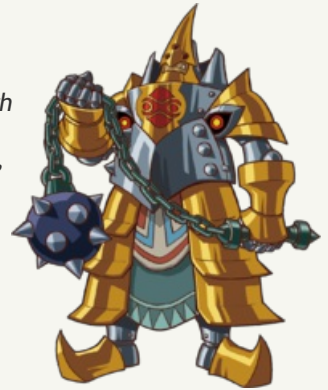

She should get something done about that weird blue rose though, that stuff can't be healthy.

Also she and her sister should move their bodies more and become fit, as they are mostly mages and puny, even if their magecraft is of a high level!

I, General Onox, just love, however, how capable they are of grasping their own destiny and forcing the rest of the world to play after their whims, not bound by any rules other than those they choose to follow, but only their own.

Bit too methodical for my, General Onoxes, liking though, should really think a bit less sometimes and let out her emotions more, is what I, General Onox, would recommend!"

"General Onox? What a pleasantly whimsical name. Reminds me of tough, igneous minerals, which is fitting...at least er, verbally. But good god, over seven feet tall? That can't make life easy. Although considering he restored such a large portion of the beastlands to wilderness, I can only assume that the occasional low-hanging bulkhead represents the least of his concerns these days. I kid around, but his getup is actually very impressive if you ask me. I'm curious as to what on earth possessed him to choose gold as a source of armour given it's ductile nature and lack of durability, I mean hell, I don't even wear gold accessories for that very reason! Nevertheless, it's still a honest-to-goodness work of art, and whatever it should lack in strength obviously makes up for in showmanship, which is arguably just as important when you're so shamelessly dedicated to large-scale destruction."

"Extra points for keeping himself clean and hygienic, although it's something I sort of expect regardless. I only wish his motives were as clean and polished as his appearance. He's not a merciless tyrant, but his actions aren't very polite either. He's conceited, narcissistic, and attracted to chaos, meaning he's willing to instigate said chaos in it's occasional absence. Honestly, this guy just seems like a well-armed contrarian with seemingly endless ammunition at his disposal. Deep down I'm sure he has his reasons, but he's too much of a hothead for my taste, and that's my opinion."

Still, he means well, and he doesn't seem to engage in vile practices, like the corporations of our former regime did.

We are so different on many levels... I mean, I can't imagine him riding to battle, commanding his warband, slaying the enemies with gun and blade, and then loudly celebrating the victory in battle and looting his slain foes. Reveling in glorious victories against worthy foes. He would detest physical fighting. He is administrator through and through. And I... if I was a manager dude in a corporate setting, who has to obey countless pointless regulations, work with all this messed up, soulless bureaucracy with confusing buzzwords, which end up meaning absolutely nothing substantial, when understood, and had to yawn on the meetings... I'd just trash the place up and run to the nearest forest, ha! Just kidding. But really, I am not an administrator manager type.

We are both badasses. But in very different ways. Still, if he wants to establish his business on our territory and cooperate with us... why not? We can make this work. Just... there are some rules, taxes and such, but I am sure we can negotiate this." -Overboss Shawn Bjornson

President William Johnson is a good man, I would say. An honest man. His political beliefs are admirable, much like the Libertarian Party here. If a man was growing because he couldn't swim and that man was, say, 100 feet out into the ocean, Johnson would throw the man a 50-foot rope and tell him to swim the rest of the way because it's good for his character. Hellion's Status: Empowering the People.

"Roy Davis is a respectable figure. His life since day one was about serving the People, and by doing so, he facilitated measures to ensure the Administration of the State is efficient and incorruptible. As Democracies can only truly survive, if the bureaucracy is smooth sailing, and untainted by those who seek to undermine the will of the People. In addition, his cunning to empower the Republic by uniting smaller countries under his banner is truly remarkable, and I believe those who opposed it are not realizing that only as one uniting force that freedom and liberty can truly be achieved. Overall, my stance is positive, and to be honest here. I'm quite envious that his world has organizations that are dedicated to freedom and keeping tyranny at bay. While I only have the Federation to do that, we do it well. Yet, it would be more productive if we had an "International Front" to get the job done and to stop the expansion of the Empire once and for all. "

So who is the next guy I have to deal with... What the hell am I looking at. Hellion? You look like the stereotypical badguy. So you grew up in a corporate hellhole, a bit like the Colonial Coalition but with less terrorism. So your mother died of overworking while she made your favorite meal... what was your favorite meal, a mega-cake? You renamed yourself Hellraiser because of a game... why? Couldn't you take a name that's less... edgy. Then we have multiple paragraphs of you playing the game, until some of them seem to act a little sapient because you were transported to another world or something, and became the leader of a "democratic federation." I think its a democratic federation, because according to your file you like democracy, but you are called "Grand Emperor Hellion." It might help your cause if you look a little bit less stereotypical evil, maybe remove the word "hell" from your name because you sound like a demon emperor and your enemies would totally use that for propaganda purposes.

For a leader of a country you look incredibly boring, no fancy armor or a mask not even a scar just some glasses. You are a astronomer, dose that mean you can predict the future by looking at the constellations. How you managed to get a degree in that is a mystery, although you terrans are relatively dumb so there is probably some school that is willing to give degrees in astronomy. How you managed to survive tailing the mafia is something that i think will never get explained but guessing by your other adventure you are very lucky. Its a shame you were not sacrificed it would have been a nice ending for you.

"Whoa... I'm not sure what kind of image you're trying to set their, bud, but you chose a really bad path by going with 'Reich'. It does puzzle me, though: the guy what popularized that word was a pretty famous white human supremacist, and you are very notably neither of those. If you're going for irony, then you're doing a good job of deadpanning it.

"Well, lessee... nnnnnnnnope, I'm seeing enough edge here that you might be doing it unironically. While I'm not one to talk on matters of edge... I'mma have to say you're doing it wrong. Ya might want to revisit things...

"Also: that's Astrology, you git. Astronomy is a perfectly respectable line of scientific inquiry. The names are juxtaposed between culture '-nomy' and knowledge '-logy' because the nutters were staring at stars to predict the future before people realized there was actually useful information up there."
