After being expelled from college for beating up a rich student, John Adam Ross got involved with a mercenary named Alexander Lewis. They funded a private army with illegal arms businesses and took over the nation of Macronesia. Ross had a scam to sell oil to the US (by selling them non-existent stocks of oil, which would lower prices of actual oil in the Middle East, which he would then buy and sell at upmarked prices) which made him very rich. He invested that in defense, infrastructure, and scientific ventures in the country.

Sounds very capitalist, but then he makes the country "socialist" to give him "greater control of the government." (because socialism is when the government does stuff, right?)

IF I understand correctly, the claim is made that the mystical element that most exemplifies Hatsunia is water. It is however noted that their apparent avatar of this affinity is 'Snow Miku', which while composed of water, is functionally composed of solid water--that can count as a mineral--and empty space that is filled with air.

Or maybe I'm just getting overly analytical... probably means I should take a nap.

The problem is that for the Godulans, numbers don't particularly apply... and also change depending on the context. After a while, the census takers all quit in disgust.

In the 7th to 8th centuries, the Frisian Kingdom was divided into four social classes: Ethelings (nobility), Frillings (free Frisians), Liten (slaves), and Laten (serfs/peasants). Actual slavery had ended later by the "early Middle Ages" (even though the Middle Ages started in the 5th century?).

They're sandwiched between Lithuania and Belarus, also sharing land borders with Latvia and Poland (IMO, really not a good place to be in, especially in certain periods such as 1939-45). Of course, after the Second Great War, they became a puppet of the USSR, then broke free in 1990.
