"Ellis can dodge bullets thanks to his speed and mandatory secondary superpower of fast reaction time, so he doesn't crash into anything at full speed. Dossier says he can run across the country in a few minutes, but that's not-so-accurate. What country? Cause countries are different. Vatican? France? Russia? I guess the latter, if I extrapolate the data about him. With such strength, blade mastery and speed its better not to piss him off, cause let's imagine the situation. A squad of insurgents ambushes him and shoots at him, all guns blazin' and unleashes a hail of bullets at him. And... No, he ain't screwed. He dodges all the bullets and when the squad reloads, he slaughters them all just like that masked dude from V is for Vendetta, before they even manage to blink, much less reload. And he just goes on to his business like nothing happened. Yes, he is civilized, polite and ready to kill everyone in the room. I also noticed, that he and that greedy treasury guy don't get along well. And I gotta admit, I like him more than Slick, and not only because of his abs. His ideology is also awesomer."-Shawn Bjomson

-Ah, a fellow warrior! I've been told stories of you leading your men into the fight, charging straight ahead, as a berserker of some sort! Although the tactical viability of such an action is questionable, I neither the less applaud your bravery! However what truly sets you apart for me is that while you've seen the faces of deaths you were able to stay something other than a raping, pillaging and destroying anything that stands in ones way monster. Of course, I disagree with your personal views such as orgies, marijuana and other immoral, at very least to me, things, but for me what matters the most is that you're a honorable warrior... Hell, I'm not allowed to read internal LP investigations, nonetheless a revealing personnel profile with sensitive information...but I'll go with it, this woman is too interesting to ignore. I think wise is also the right word, and not just when it comes to combat theory and weapons engineering, it seems like Yunru just has this preternatural understanding of the world that is hard to describe. It was good thinking convincing his peers to evacuate with him to a safer location rather than blindly following directions...might have even saved her life. I don't envy having to confront the inhospitable barrens of the Siberia, but I think Yunru did remarkably well given her limited resources, and I'd even go the lengths to say that the organization owes much of its success to her presence. She basically built the paramilitary from the ground up, and did it successfully, but I do sympathize with her initial apprehension regarding the responsibility of leadership...albeit on a er, smaller, more-commercial scale."

"I have to say, I really respect Yunru's management sty- (Ahem) I mean er...governance philosophy. The ability to recognize when it's necessary to act benevolently towards your subordinates, and when it's necessary to bring the hammer down, is a fundamental provision for good leadership that promotes fair order, and Yunru displays the traits. I'll admit, her indoctrinated esteem towards the tenets of communist philosophy is a little concerning, but for all I know it could just be the psychological remnants of a child raised in such an environment. I'm torn whether to say I approve what she does or not, because let's face it, she's capable but also unpredictable. I don't know what her true motives are yet, and although she's smart beyond her years, she's still a military functionary, and I'll always harbour a bit of skepticism for those kinds of people."

RESPONSE FROM THE INSTITUTE

"This empress is the typical royal type. A spoiled only child who was educated to be both submissive to the tyranny of traditions and state, and yet iron-fisted when dealing with commoners. One who even when dictating her memories hides her 'bad' qualities. A typical high class twit."

So, Ms. Sparacino started out as a member of an "ecoist" movement, aiming to help radically reduce global climate impact. A reasonable philosophy, by all means, and one that many timelines are in dire need of.

However, she radicalized into her own branch of "Apocalysm", which...seeks to end climate impact, by exterminating humanity?"

"That is the most wildly impractical proposal I have seen."

"Need I continue with my assessment? It is clear Gisella is nothing but a hypocrite and a tyrant, masquerading a bloodlust and dictatorial view with aims to "save the world by killing off humankind", as if another species won't evolve in a few million years to cause their own cycle of destruction."

"Apocalysm is a futile and unsustainable movement, and I dearly hope it collapses under its own hypocrisy before it causes serious damage, and that cooler heads prevail and avert the course of humanity from this disastrous fate."

"What in the hell am I reading here? You know what, I won't even question this. It's beyond logical reason. Don't get me wrong, Marshal is a perfectly effective leader in the academic sense, I mean he has a crown that was probably once made of metal, but the sheer absurdity of his rule makes me question his legitimacy. I feel like I'm reading a hyperbolic onion article with every account of his actions, every statement, every biographical tidbit. Let's face it, he leads an intoxicating cult of personality, and just like all the great despots in history, his portrait's being pinned on the dart board of assassins faster than he can plaster his own face on every wall, window, and bathroom in town. Supreme Leader? Supreme feeder more like. Feeder of bullsh*t, that is. In any case, he doesn't exactly make a compelling argument for likability."

"I see he's a graduate of PragerU. Marshal's display of insufferable incoherency is impressive, but I don't even think a single political outlet in the world would want to invite Marshal's commentary. He's already jammed the information highways of his nation with so much disjointed nonsense that he's literally filibustering the public understanding of democracy. I don't even know how someone does that, but lo and behold, Marshal has. What else is there really to say? He's a flamboyant peacock running a salt-based banana republic, and I think that speaks for itself."

I wonder, how many cars did he crash during texting? And why won't he just get a new ram? Other than that, he is a totally fine behind the scenes guy, even if he distracts even more than I do... damn, dropped the soap.

If ya' hear this, Khameday, I am rootin' for ya! Keep up with nice job on infrastructure, it's extremely important for both trade and war! If ya' need our advice, just ask, we will come up with some creative solution. And if ya' want booze, we can also send a bottle over!"-Shawn Bjornson

Hmm I think you mixed up Khameday with Atkhal Daishin, its fine.

/SKIP ME

Highly democratic and freedom-loving population, what if Mongolia and Japan had a child who also has an Indian driving instructor, increasing tensions between Market Socialists and Maoists, eats the aegh fish, pets the aegh fish, Aruday metro train doors have a tendency to amputate riders

QUOTE

My dear ruler, the Shephard is a slave industry worker, a mutant, and a sick man. Even though he had id hard, and his early life was probably pretty hard I would never forgive and neither forget his bad acts and crimes against humanity.

Physically and psychically he is a monster.

-His Excellency Hans Hamilton
