No punishment, elections are free, open, and fair much to the People's credit. Some Iaepatusians do choose to vote for the Communist Party of Iaepatius, while others vote for the Leahayūn Party, which takes pacifism as a main tenet.

Though, it will be said that no Nazi party has existed, currently exists, or ever will exist in PR Iaepatius; such parties are banned by law for the protection of the People.

Punishment for malicious false accusations of serious crimes?

Stella Nera doesn't really care unless its showing inappropriate stuff or its a formal government event in which case a fine that keeps increasing for each time the offenses are committed and eventually corporal punishment but nothing more, except maybe a ban from certain events. If its a protestor doing it then through the interdimensional rift they go.

Oh Stella Nera is extremely anti-religious so the Pope would get tossed into an interdimensional rift and the person who did it would get an award/medal.

Remember, the first thing they did was burn the books. Literature should never, under no circumstances, be banned in a free country. Thus in Khoikhoia, a free country, it is not banned. Currently, we have a massive whopping total of 0 banned books. Some are more discouraged than others, such as supremacist manifestos, but they are not banned as such.

That would mean the highest penalty, expulsion from the realm which means you get thrown through an interdimensional rift which takes you who knows where so the government doesn't have to deal with you anymore. That or the military shoots you.
