Children in the True Way of the Will typically serve much of their early lives in large dormitories. These dormitories have massive amounts of staff devoted to raising children and because of it, it is nearly impossible for a child to feel left out or alienated. The staff quickly note any signs of distress, and address the problems quickly.

The average Ghesite fighter essentially uses whatever equipment they can afford, to help protect their own family and tribe more than to serve in any sort of organized military (Be it a peasant levy or a standing army), and they don't exactly hold gender-limits, as man and woman both may take up arms.

I learned way more about medieval Dutch tax systems than I wanted to, that's for sure. Frisia also basically abolished their tax system, as the high influence of the bourgeoisie basically stops any taxation outside of the urban cities. Government revenue is mostly earned through tariffs, as in a mercantile economy.

King Georg Wilhelm Kehr "The Feared" III was, shall we say, incredibly disliked, due to being a horrid leader. His misdeeds include threatening to Engage in the Seven Years' War, Ruling WF with an Autocratic Fist, Threatening to Engage in Fisticuffs with the Entirety of Europe, and in all likelihood Kicking Small, Soft, Innocent Puppies.

As a result, WF created the Parliament.
