"The ascendance of Kokichi Oma to primacy over the Aotearoan islands* is perhaps the most unabashedly bizarre sequence of events I have ever had the chance of setting eyes upon, and to speak unsparingly, it is not something I have found particularly appealing either. The cult of personality built by this so-called 'Ultimate Supreme Leader' rivals those of North Korea, Nazi Germany, Stalinist Russia, and Maoist China in its brazenness; thankfully he has not yet come close to achieving the level of human carnage perpetrated by those regimes, although he does seem to be trying. Kokichi Oma's economic policies, meanwhile, are a morbidly interesting surprise. Despite claiming via the official party line to be collectivizing the economy, all the outside accounts I have read suggest that he has done the exact opposite - namely, selling off the nation's assets to financial elites and multinational corporations, and allowing them to run wild in their singular quest for profit. Many innocent people have died in the process, and all who have dared sound the alarm have been sent off to labor camps. To be forthright, I see no particular reason why this increasingly lethal experiment in totalitarian dictatorship has any business continuing to exist."

Perhaps, due to the nature of process, that rendered him like that? Makes sense. After all, magic flows may alter biochemistry, but they are energy, and this is related to physics field.

And what the heck is Death Energy anyway? Since it turned Hiutharnes into a vampire, rather than blow him up, it's definitely not entropy. "Well, we've dealt with demons and the like before... quite frequently in fact. Mayhap it will come as some surprise that we actually look upon them with no small amount of pity. They are slaves to their very nature, subject to complex yet immutable instinctive drives to acquire more and more souls or whatever they choose to name such things. Such creatures are manipulative, but also eminently manipulable in turn. I could see myself engaging one or two of them in a most satisfying game of Go, and possibly even doing business with them. However, they will find us an... unappetizing target, and any designs they might possess would be opposed not solely by us, but other demons that consider us to be spoken for." -Kal'Shazzar

Not since his father put the only other man in Germany more qualified six-feet beneath the ground, back in the '90s. Oh, the things Honecker could have done given half the chance, ay? But I guess that's a pipe dream now. No, now we're left with... This. Credit where credit is due, any man willing to fight for his country deserves respect. I've seen my own share of 'soldier kings', and my God is it refreshing to see one actually willing to get some mud on his uniform. But beyond that, what else is there to say about the Kaiser? He's little more than a relic of a time when men like him were relevant. No, the era of monarchs is drawing to an end, and its only a matter of time before another Honecker crawls out of the shadows. By God I hope this next one finishes the job."

"These uniforms and medallion pins are honoured relics of a time an entire nation reminisces for once more. Priceless in currency and in sentimental value. I'd be remiss to leave a spec of dirt on this uniform; it represents years of societal advancement and technological innovation. The world doesn't need more soldier-kings, General Wiker, and you know this well. The world needs more commanders in office. Authoritarian statesmen who will accept nothing less than the pinnacle of society. Curse us as you may, our struggle is one in the same. The Callianer Revolution will never be truly complete until you acknowledge this."

~ Reichspräsident Hanna Reitsch
