Theoretically you could be liable for a prison sentence of up to 7 years for hacking, however it's more likely that you would be fined and placed under supervision for a few years and banned from accessing the internet during the supervision period. There's a very slim chance that you might get away with a warning, and a likely ban from said university.

There is no internet here yet, as it is 1930. But, in the future, it will probably be free and open, leading to no punishment as it is not a crime.

That's treated as harrasment, which can have years in prison and a restraining order if it goes on long enough.
