Simply not having a license/certification to operate a piece of equipment is not a crime in itself.

Throwing a relatively non-hazardous object, such as a tomato, at the head of state?

It is true that not all X are Y. But as long as X-ness can be used as a defense for Y-ness, it is reasonable to be suspicious of it.

Nation mostly reflects my views, but I'm not allowing myself to dismiss issues.

Likely no punishment, perhaps a few dozen Krownviggens in fines if you're excessively doing it.

Political protests are protected by law, therefore no crime (even if you used napalm to do the shaving...).

Joining the "Real life supervillain" movement and violently opposing "Real life superheroes" (ie beating up folks who think they're the next "kick ass").

Assault is a crime punishable by a fine or a short-term prison sentence, although if they kill someone the punishment becomes a lot harsher.

Not in itself a crime; any politician accepting a bribe however, will be sacked, stripped of all illegally obtained funds and then forced to consume an amount of croton oil equal in value to the bribe they took. Assuming they don't drown, they are then free to start their new career as a sewer flusher...

Crime:

Supporting TNP/Europeia in their ongoing & unjustified aggressive actions against the peaceful region of Solidarity - simply because said region shares a political alignment with The Communist Bloc.

Assuming the support is in belief/words and not donations or physical aid: Nothing, we have freedom of speech here. There are specific laws around what materials and moneys can be donated to out-of-country groups, so material support could run afoul of those, potentially leading to confiscation of donated goods, a maximum 20,000 Flurin fine, and up to 20 years in prison and/or a rehabilitation center depending on what is donated (this upper boundary would only be in extreme cases, such as the donation of chemical weapons or other such highly illegal goods).
