"While our relationship with our timeline's Union of Soviet Socialist Republics was not exactly positive, and the state itself did not, to put it mildly, end well, Chairman Nabatov seems to be a remarkably reasonable man all things considered. His reworking of the Soviet system into one that properly represents its people is commendable, as are his initiatives to protect the environment. I must say I would not mind having his state as a neighbor, assuming he would not mind our peaceful island existence."

Jarvis' Mood: Intellectual

"It is the most controversial leaders, as opposed to the most successful, who have the greatest impacts on history. For everyone can agree that the deeds of a great leader were great, and that the effects they have on society were positive in the long term. The leaders who straddle the line between good and evil, black and white, now they are the ones scholars across multiple fields will debate over for years to come. A leader whose alignment is not altogether clear is a leader whose motives are speculated and analyzed for generations beyond their passing. Yes, a leader must hope to have at least a douse of good amidst their evil or a douse of evil amidst their good if they hope to be worthwhile in human history.

"Ari is one of such controversial leaders. She has the goodness of her passion, her devotion, her strength both as a leader and as an individual. But she also has sufficient evil in her ways of violence. I say that, however her reign unfolds, she will be remembered for eons as one who presents qualities that paint her both positively and negatively. A compelling personality, indeed."

"The hell? America gave Ohio to the North Koreans in this timeline?"

I thought Al Gore and Kokichi were a joke, but this is straight up six-year-old politics here. Like this 'plan' is something that a child trying to be President would think of, with no attention placed on limits on executive power or the liberties of citizens.

Firstly, how the hell would the North Korea even gain control of Ohio? They can't fly their planes there, and Ohio only has Lake Erie and the St. Lawrence river for sea access, both of which are thousands of miles away from the nearest North Korean coast. Basically, North Korea would have to rely on the US's good graces to keep connections with the area.

I shouldn't even go into the rest of why this is a bad idea, but I'm pissed that some dipshit not only won the Presidency but used it to tyrannize the common person with absurd policies. That and deliberately weakening the nation by ceding American soil to the damn Koreans.

The official data on the Settler's League and the Captain's rule suggests that much progress has been made to rebuild and advance civilization, and in some senses that appears to be true. That said, based on certain reports it would appear that he very quickly lost any sense of idealism and descended into overreaching tyranny. I am not suggesting he make a sudden transition to full democracy, but such iron-fisted, cruel rule as his surely will not ensure the long-term survival, and especially not the thriving of his people. The exact nature of life within the walls of his city I do not yet know for certain but I do not perceive it as pleasant. His remarkably hostile attitude toward myself and my kind does him no favors with me. Overall my opinion is somewhat negative on this man, though I cannot claim to know what the best system would be in the icy world he finds himself in, and depending on what other forces exist outside his borders perhaps he is indeed the lesser evil."

It's especially bad when you're combining all of that with religious devotion to said being, probably spread all across the nation. It's just depressing to witness. Fortunately, it doesn't seem like she has any desire to spread that problem elsewhere at the moment. Huh, Chile is demsoc in her timeline, and isn't ruled either by a capitalist shill that the traitorous Pinochet was, or by the fash? Well, I hope that at least the empanadas still taste well in her country. A bit weird seeing her to be a Catholic, as socialists are usually perceived as atheist types, but I have seen enough religious socialists that I shouldn't be surprised anymore. Although, perhaps she is just rather a cultural Catholic instead.

She is the youngest chairperson to assume the office in her country, I see... At least she has staunch principles to hold on to, and her background is somewhat of a pattern I see in socialist revolutionaries - parents are usually from middle class or related to government in some way, hence why types like her can get access to more education and the materials of socialism. If she was of lower working class folk, I bet that she would be more conservative. As for the pros, I actually agree with most of them at least partially, with perhaps an exception for gun rights. Same for antis, but it is where our differences start to show - I agree with her being against isolationism, but something akin to colonialism is an useful tool for global superpower. Her being anti-dictatorial is problematic for me too, same for being against ethnonationalists. Gonna remain neutral so far.

So this is the man who invented internet in his timeline, by re-purposing a project which was supposed to aid the economical planning of socialists. I honestly have mixed feelings towards this, especially considering that in his timeline is basically as close to an ancap which you could get, and he has men like Evola in government as well. Anyways, let's go ahead.

Huh, he suffered from a chemical gas attack in a world war fighting against axis-aligned Argentina? Now where I have heard a similar story before? Except the mustache man was actually more cowardly as he mostly worked as a messenger behind frontlines and was on the side with Germans, but it seems that our Pino at least had more guts. Yeah, I get that his hatred towards socialists is from the period when he witnessed how that marxist ran Chile, but judging from one of his pic, he seems to love heavy lifting as well.

He helped with putting down an attempt of a coup, but it seems that he played quite a dirty game to get those minuscule 2% edge over the buddhist-socialist Allende's results. I see that he used the fact that Chile had an ongoing recession, and the sweet money from USA probably was beneficial for his campaign as well. Overall, yuck.

Either way, trademarking the name "Chile" sounds like both a stupid and genius decision at the same time, and so is the plan of selling Bolivians the coast and building navy for them, only to nuke the coast to make sure that they can't use it again - that's a big brain move right there. His extreme individualism is unhealthy, and so is his ancap society with the cronies and corporate executives. At least he has a cool nuclear stockpile, I guess, but the phrases "paleolibertarian" and "trickle down economics" makes me vomit, if I had a mouth.

His personality is not much different from the usual high elves that i have met before, being very into themselves and considering their race as superior above others (and i do not mean this in a negative way, its just observation). but i have noticed his compassion and politeness as well, so that is a plus. One thing that bothers me, and this seems to be a common occurrence among other communist leaders, is that he seems to be very militaristic with 'spreading the revolution', which as everyone knows, carries the potential of lost innocent lives... and this is the very reason why communism is held in such a bad light. but that being said, even capitalism has its evils (as shown by a certain 'someone' above Naevora), and for that reason it has become a long-standing feud between the two sides which, unfortunately, seems to be never-ending at this rate... Nevertheless, he is very capable militarily and politically, as he has shown in his past. I would definitely be interested in getting to know him a bit more. but until that time comes, i will stay neutral"
