Legally going against the wishes of the Congress can get a President sacked, and then imprisoned for corruption. This hasn't happened in American history however; though presidential decrees exist, the President still obeys the will of the Congress, rather than doing the congress's job where lawmaking is concerned.

Death penalty, trough forced labor/experimentation. There are however exceptions and generally the definitions of this crime in Laka differentiate from the world (not in a way you'd expect) but I won't go into detail because site rules.

If the attack was commanded in pursuit of a justified objective, and there was no alternative, it would not be treated as a crime in se. If, however, there was no justified objective, or a less injurious method existed, the crime would be murder, which is punished by life in prison in this country. A commander is always under the legal obligation to choose the path that causes fewest casualties in both his own men and the enemy, all else being the same. To fail to do as much means they have acted against the law, which means their commands are not enforceable.

Possession of drugs is decriminalized (although with intent to sell, it is illegal and punishable with prison time). All firearms have to be registered and licensed with the government, so possessing an unregistered and therefore unlicensed firearm, the punishment would also prison time (15 - 20 years). Owning an unregistered vehicle (and not intending to register and license it) is punishable with a fine, (if having one) your driving license rendered null and confiscated, and a week in jail and the following month for community service or house arrest.

Fake identity is not possible in Caleon as identification is tracked through an under-the-skin ID chip. Attempting to do so is not a crime unless you are on the run from the police, at which the retailer has jurisdiction to arrest you on the spot.
