When I was making that astronaut Nicholas image, I was toying with the idea to make astronaut Alexei. But I then decided against it, because everyone would definitely be making stupid Tabby jokes.

Just thought of one. People using the factbook templates from Ponderosa and others, but removing the little credit on the bottom. It's a bit rude imo. Luckily everyone who has asked for my bbcode has credited me for it so that's lovely!

I am proud to say I am opposite of that. I am not taking chances.

But yeah, please do give credits, folks. Don't be doing the plagiarism.

I am trying to make my own terrible templates with inspiration from other people across NS, if I see a trick I like I'll just raw see it and then adapt it for myself but obviously I won't steal the whole factbook template.

I say that as though I'm not a morally bankrupt coderobber.

I'm glad that you posted this because it might remind people (like me) that forgot to put the credits in their factbook.

That sounds alright tbh. If people don't want any part of their code robbed they should keep it "closed-source", so to speak. BUT... Attribution should always be applied where you grab huge chunks or just use the code verbatim, tho

I do give credit if I pick up an idea from someone, like in my history factbook where I credit CBG and Leskya for the factbook basic layout and inspiration.

Most of the code I ""steal"" is commonly available code like [sidebar] that I just never knew about previously.

Similarly, I think most of what I've done is looking at chunks of code to isolate tiny widgets and figure out how they work, like how Khoronzon made the table-in-a-table in some of his factbooks.

Speaking of the structure of factbooks, I've seen quite a lot of website factbooks. Not saying they're bad, infact I really like their format, but they're common along with the newbie style factbook (just listing 2 lines of info in 1 sentence and then being done) and the wikia style factbook (I use the latter, infact).

However, I'm not really satisfied with Savroyska. I infact plan to create a nation known as the "Veddauxian Federation" since its lore isn't as lazy as Savroyska's is.
