Oh, by the look of things while my absence they have found a new leader. First of all, and a bit out of character, I really can not understand how a commander can rule an entire country, that's more the thing of a marshall (as me ;o)

He was lucky in his early age, his family had money to send him to an officer school. I am before marshall a soldier, and I find that idea disgusting and lacking of braveness, you can't train someone to be an officer without having expertise on beeing a troop, because he won't understand them. Even though, at least he seems like he really cares about doing things right and defends his rule. He rules a cheerful country, people are religious and happy, that is something I respect very much, and he wants to keep his people safe from the danger of their enemies. So, in general, my opinion is positive.
