Personally so, sometimes (Like the "You Rewrite AN" thread, for instance)... I have no idea of his etiquette on other forums on this site, as you mentioned he is apparently pretty good in dedicated RP's, though I haven't actually seen anything like that yet, but on F7...

Let's just say many of us on F7 are adverse to him for a reason.

Maybe F7 should stop expecting people to write War and Peace. I remember when this forum was much less stringent. Like, yeah, answers just completely ignoring people's factbooks would get ignored in turn, but it wasn't demanded of people to write a novella in the leader opinion threads.

If you wanna do it visually or via a game, I would say go for it. Just look out for how moddable the game is, because I often come across dead-ends because I realised "Ohh crap, the game is not that moddable" and it doesn't have much of a weight as to what I had in mind.

Moddable?

I am not sure how modding would play into that. Or do you mean something else with that?

That is, if you are using video games or RPG maker games, you want to see how far you can push it with the stats, for example. ^^ Would be a bit of a waste if only at the end you realised "Oh crap, they don't go above 99 for all stats."

Good luck!

On the topic of responses, I don't expect a novel, but I can say that what most of us expect is for people to read it properly, at least small little bits here and there. The answer can be an one-liner, that's okay. The problem begins when the response is so nondescript that you can paste it anywhere and it would make sense.

And repetition of the same response.

Oh, that. Combat will likely be a secondary thing due to the game being more of an equivalent of a short story collection in my concept idea of it. If I don't make fixed levels I expect the games to have an increase of 10 levels at most in the stories that are more combat heavy themewise. So, there is unlikely to be much progression and stat maximation, I do not like stat-limits in singleplayer games, however, so I probs don't make any.

About the second, I agree. No-effort generic responses are really demotivating, although I'm probably guilty of those sometimes.

I disagree, and I wouldn't really call it godmodding when it meaningfully advances the story in a neutral manner.

A cliché I noticed is that some people try to have common sense apply in their and other nations.

They might have a species that is not human, but that's mostly just a reskin, as they behave like humans and have the common sense.

Also that they try to apply it to a place or group where common sense definitely doesn't apply, like mine.

It's weird fams

If it decides the outcome without giving the other player a chance to respond, it is godmodding. Saying "I shoot down your bombers" is godmodding, because the other player does not get any chance to RP. It doesn't matter whether it's the "Realistic Outcome" it's just not fun.

In general, I feel like the most important reason for this happening is, for a human mind it's comfortable and easier to create something that is more so 'logical'... IMO, even if someone is going out of their way to create something... Strange, it's hard to stop the subconscious for ruining that vision...

However, it sure is a cliché.

To be honest, I'd like to see more of it too. However, I don't think I'll probably be the one to do it in any recent future.

The Princessdom of Hyrule. A fanfiction based on the Legend of Zelda :: Twilight Princess that takes place half a decade after the conclusion of the game. A new caste of Hyruleans, no less the newly built army resent the old Guard and Princess-Sovereign Zelda for the surrender of the realm to the Twilight and the weakness of Hyrule from invasion...

Meanwhile, the Zora worry greatly about the militarization of Hyrule, and the Goron less so due to the Economic stranglehold of the Rupee of which they have as leverage.

Never again shall Hyrule fall, and never again shall we sully the name of Hylia under our weakness!
