If by forcing you mean committing a coup or revolting and failing, life in prison without parole, and with the possibili of execution.

As a border guard, letting a known child rapist through, knowing full well that a vigilante is waiting on the other side of the fence, thereby causing him to die from said vigilante group?

The border guard will face permanent termination from employment because they allowed someone with recent criminal record in Merimenean soil. The vigilante group will face legal problems due to unlawful execution of someone, since it is still murder, facing 20 years of jailtime minimum.

well it's complicated. If you search up Talking Angela and go to videos, you may see why I put that crime there in the first place.

It depends. Federal law does not prohibit alcohol being transferred between states, and leaves the question of prohibition up to states and counties. If you take alcohol from a state that allows it into a state that does not, you may have to pay a fine or even may end up in jail for a short time.

Not illegal in most nations, as it turns out. Though, admittedly, this is because many can't afford cars, and those who can are able to afford someone to drive them. The one exception are the Lekkans, who do not allow drinking or narcotics at all. So if you did that there, you'd most likely either go to a labor camp, or be exiled.
