I mean, what's there to say but that? I hate her. She means well, but man, I hate her, and her ideology.

Listen here bucko, get back here, and tell me why you don't think progress is impossible. No, don't close the door. Stop pulling your curtains! I know you're still in there!

Huh, long time haven't seen anyone from Stanier, and much less the Barbaro himself. A comedian, former show host, businessman... We are off to a great start, it seems. Also, a son of an unidentified American soldier who was killed in action? Well, let's just hope that the soldier blood indeed flows in you from father's side.

Born in the working class, huh. It seems that he was raised by soldiers for some period, and actually could handle the MRE's for his age - damn, some of my commanders would be jealous to have such a gem. That said, it seems that discipline was not exactly his strong side, and at least he found football as a hobby. It seems that he also didn't receive much love from his mother due of her being absent and working heavily, so he took it up to himself to search for it. I guess that humans are social creatures, after all.

Either way, while he might be of the worker class in the past, he certainly has climbed up the ladder - from working for nickels and dimes in homeless shelters, to becoming a businessman. I think that in his military service a full circle was closed - Barbaro had returned to the thing which had raised him as a toddler, but now he was a full member of the team.

It seems that he isn't too vocal about his positions - clever, very clever, considering that otherwise he could bring an unpleasant crowd which would want to bring out your skeletons out of the closet. That said, from what I can gather he is an atheist, supports direct democracy, and also probably subscribes to Hayek's economics. Overall, a big yikes there.

“Those who sought to be ruled by a machine have doomed themselves to death and destruction. A machine cannot rule a nation of organics. It does not know the needs of its subjects. It may give accurate calculations to keep the people feed, and the nation's industry growing strong, but otherwise, when it comes to the political and the emotional elements of an organic race. It can't truly comprehend it as such elements border on the irrational, and the dogmatic, and not always the logical and rational. I recommend the Commonwealth to reconsider having a machine managing its bureaucracy and be scaled back to operate the economy, where it will be more effective at governing. My stance is negative.

Kal'Shazzar WAS lobotomized, he did not do it to someone else. Sarathress restored and enhanced him.

He will never do such a procedure to anyone else, and holds a deep personal hatred of anyone who might attempt such a thing.

Status: Not Classified, for public's eye, if necessary

So, his utopia is basically a world full with treachery and torment, where mercilessness reigns and strong rule over the weak for power of its own sake? Those are some real Darwinist hours, man. Either way, I have mixed feelings towards his views. Good to see that at least he was the one who got the throne through coup, despite his claim to it being tenuous. What he did to Brega reminds me a bit of Ivan the Terrible and his actions against Boyars. He centralizes the power more in his empire, and that is good too.

Now to the biography - even if he was only third in the line, it seems that he is similarly bright like Oswald, and the tales about heroic conquerors and past of the empire called and appealed to him more than the decadent inheritor lifestyle which could have very well drowned a different youngster. He might be a royal, but I wish good luck to him.
