I've noticed different FT 'verses have different "rules" for FT, which I think is pretty cool. There's Star Wars style fast paced action, or Star Trek style slow going action keeping fuel estimates and all in mind, and many things in between. FT gives you a lot of flexibility, which is partly why I personally was never good at writing FT, I feel like I kinda need constraints of realism ot give me a benchmark

Can you not clog this thread with your stuff please? Let people enjoy themselves.

You know, that would be a far more valid criticism if this thread wasn't primarily used for subposting about people its users don't like; so yeah, I suppose by actually not doing that I am deviating from what people come here from. Still, nobody's stopping you from enjoying anything.

So just give yourself some constraints of realism, my man. Hard FT is in fact a thing, and it's not even a nerf in terms of national strength or w/e if you're into that.

It can be fun to invent space things, but I'd definitely have to do research and hope nothing was totally implausible.

Read books, if you want somewhere to start. The Expanse series is a decent place to get into basic concepts like realistic combat ranges and existing without artificial gravity.

I mean to be fair, merging fantasy and science fiction takes it out of the realm of speculative fiction altogether and into the realm of Science Fantasy.

That being said, if the writer can integrate "magic" into a sci fi setting with minimal coherency issue, I see no problem in the practice.

So Iron Sky and Iron Sky: The Coming Race and all those wack conspiracy theories about Nazis setting up a colony on the Moon is what Mondbasis Achtzig revolves around. Also Wolfenstein. Edgy Nazi Space people with completely ridiculous explanation about how they came to power on the moon and stuff. At this point I have ideas that I have no idea how to execute it.

THIS

Most experienced writers I've seen work out winners and losers beforehand and collaborate to write the posts together, I've been working on quite a few collaborative posts recently, I think that sort of RP is far more engaging at least to someone who loves to write endlessly like myself 😊

I also like rolling out occasional character posts delving on the backstory of my characters, government workings, etc. partly why I made the lore thread in my sig, still working on posting there, but it's coming
