"Unfortunately for the nation of Sherechia, I am strongly opposed to any and all communist or socialist beliefs. While we can see eye to eye in regards to worker's rights and seeking the best for our own people, I condemn the corruption that is inherent to the system. Their leader tortured and crushed a man's head in public, for God's sake. I am not stating that the death penalty as a punishment is barbaric, but there are some things best left out of view of the public. He also shows great immaturity in assaulting those in Parliament whom he holds disagreements with. Overall, I hold Mr. Estima in very, very low regards and pray that we never have the misfortune of crossing paths."-The Supreme Leader, Markus Auron-Sirus

"It is quite a feat to have restored your own nation from an isolationist, genocidal regime to something of a stable, functioning capitalist society, though if there are any complaints, its' most likely urging your homeless and lower-class to farms and mines, when you can easily employ them as reserve infantry and grant them a glory they'd always dreamed of having. Then again, the unlikely ideology of pacifism you seem to have a mind for undoes all that potential, but at least you had put them to economic usage. Perhaps I could do that with the military serfs... nonetheless, I see a fellow Catholic and I think of him as a brother, no matter how questionable his policy."

The Knights of Mare Nostrum are an order formed in 1189 centered around islands in the Mediterranean after the Knights Hospitaller and Templar merged, along with the integration of other knightly orders, serving as a militarized Papal State which utilises what is essentially hyper-militaristic canon law.

A man without care and love for those around him (except those who he does have affection for, so okay, he's not totally loveless), just to spread his religion around. Mind you, I don't have anything against spreading one's religion IF the other guy doesn't mind, but by conquest. And there is so much depravity that goes more than murder, fate worse than death, I am not going to say further. (Mouth says Gods prayers, as the hand does inappropriate things.)

Oh ok, ehmmmm thanks for the helpfull informatio P.A.I. So you're an actual nazi, and now you're stuck in Eastern

Germany surrounded by enemies on all sides using child-soldiers to delay your inevitable death. Yeah, that's not going to work, you will probably not even last 6 months before you're either shot and/or hanged. Or maybe even turned to ash by an Accord nuclear strike. You call everyone you don't like thieves while you are stuck on a piece of land that you stole from the Polish. You have a lot of talk of being the superior race, yet your "glorious" reich didn't even last 20 years after you supposedly "won" your war. You are all so insecure of your own people, that you build massive unsustainable monument in your capital for no reason other then having something big. How the hell did you even manage to build that enormous big building on the swampy grounds of Bertin. Did you reinforce the ground with the corpses of all the people you killed?! "What? The flag of the 'Southern Union' is literally the canton of the RCAS flag. I thought the whole point of inverting the colors of the Confederate flag was to make it national as opposed to regionalist! Bah!

Anyways, this is supposed to be my opinion on the technocrat guy. I've heard about Howard Scott before. Some obscure early 20th century politician, or well, not as obscure apparently since his organization had a large membership base in the early 30s. It is pretty interesting that he was recruited by the IWW of all organizations. Even though he opposes capitalism, he doesn't do so out of a desire to liberate the working class. Instead, his issues with 'capitalism' are in the 'wastefulness'. Fundamentally, his worldview is authoritarian and oligarchic, seeing only a technocratic elite of engineers as being fit to rule society, even if it is for the good of the people. I completely disagree with this world-view. What would make a good engineer doesn't necessarily make for a better ruler of society than the average person. Now, engineers should have a say in society, and they have their very own syndicates within the RCAS's political system. He didn't even abolish the wage system, merely replacing traditional money with energy certificates. I'm not sure if it's based on energy of the PRODUCING goods or SHIPPING goods, and his energy theory of value doesn't seem to be that compelling to me.

Every aspect of his program oozes with a servile sensibility. From the anti-democratic tendencies to the universal basic income that chains the average citizen to the government, Howard Scott essentially created a version of capitalism or something similar to it that is adapted to avoid a worker's revolution. It is essentially the same path that China has gone through in my timeline. It is quite sad to see America, the land of the free, a land of liberty, fall to such servility. Well, at least it wasn't the American people who ended democracy through self-destruction. Instead, it was nefarious ballot-rigging.

That leads me to wonder...how did the Technocrats even get 41% of the vote? Sure, they were mildly popular in our timeline, but the old American system was heavily against third parties. The only exception would be when one of the two parties collapses like with the Whig Party or the Democratic Party in the 60s. That or if the party is regional in nature, like the Democrats during the 21st century. Really, Howard Scott would've been better off taking over one of the major parties. Or well, at least that's what I'd think. Apparently, he succeeded, albeit with ballot-rigging, through his own party. But yeah, I worked through the Democratic Party to enact change, radicalizing it. And before anyone calls me a hypocrite for opposing ballot-rigging while I supported a violent takeover of the government, I literally was forced to work with authoritarian governments who all banned the Democratic Party. Meanwhile, Howard Scott was given full freedom to campaign for elections, albeit with non-government violence directed against him, and the sore loser STILL cheated during an election where he almost won. He couldn't even wait four more years. I honestly don't know why America didn't end up into a civil war over this.

Also, the fact that this cheater is a colossal moralizer, despite his supposed pragmatism, irks me too. Now, Featherston I still oppose due to his authoritarianism, but I haven't read anything about exterminations from him. At most, it is lynchings. Now, I do find the idea of lynching negroes over rape accusations to be dumb, mostly because rape accusations can easily be falsified. That and the court of law can easily deal with the *s without an issue. The lynchings are especially pointless considering that Freedonia, the world's version of the Confederacy, is an independent country, not subject to the 14th and 15th amendments. Negroes presumably can't vote and 'equal treatment' isn't forced. So, there is no point to lynching or violence if white supremacy is firmly entrenched.

Wait a second, I'm doing the technocrat, not the Southern caricature.

Now, I actually do think intervening early against Adolf Hitler was a good call though. Or well, I would if World War 2 didn't end in 1948. How the fuck did you fuck up intervening early against Hitler? With extensive American support, I don't know if the Nazis would've even defeated France, let alone pull off Operation Barbarossa. Man, for being an oh-so-smart technocrat, the fucker doesn't seem to be that good at winning wars.

In total, Howard Scott is a pretentious doodoo head. Probably lets *s have their way with his wife or something.

Wait a second, why is there the Canadian leaf on the flag? Canada didn't even get that flag until the 60s!

“Ah, another fine tale of another fine soldier trying to strive, taking up arms against a worldwide power and trying to return back to her home, a true epic of its time, most certainly. This in itself would make the finest inspiration for a fairy tale...”

“While I do believe she’s quite the excellent tactician and soldier, I really don’t believe it’s safe to simply stay a military leader. You’re in a losing war, a bad thing to say, but you should make do with what you can and hope something comes to save your situation: go underground, create a new life. Let this Epsilon burn itself out, potentially? Even though you might not be around to see it...”

"Hmmm, this Queen, Salem. What an interesting one, they say burn the witches, though it seems having a touch of magic doesn't quite grant you a slow death by fire but instead a throne, it's amusing.

The power you hold over your people, they even call you a goddess.

You've done so much good, and so much of the opposite it makes me wonder just what for.

You rally humanity to fight something stronger than they can handle to only start over again despising them for the differences you hold. It's strange but I hold a little respect for you, monarchs don't often get along with us too well and Gods are something I despise, but it seems you have struggled through much to gain those titles so perhaps in the future we will meet again. I look forward to our future interactions."-Luden
