I'm a bit iffy on getting into the affairs of people that aren't in the Domain's, eeee, domain. Even if they are for a swell cause that betters our species' ability for survival. The human species, I mean. But, you've made the burden of it work out. But you surely must be doing something right to be able organize working...uhhh...social chains, after re-structuring the institutions around places you say to liberate.

It's very surprising for me, working for squares all the time, sometimes it's hard to imagine other lifestyles...I don't think I'd like living under total liberty all the time, play seems better after a lot of work, but that's just me, an Anhu. They are no more than useless- or sometimes useful- idiots, who do nothing for the sake of their nation or people and inevitably meet their end sooner or later. I see now that this figure was precisely the latter. He has done nothing but veil himself in lies and treachery for only the slightest bit of self-service, much like those weaklings and brainless bickerers on the Imperial Court before the fall. And fittingly, just as with those disgusting pigs who dared call themselves rulers and advisors to our grand Sovereign, he too has perished in a painful, humiliating death."

What makes a woman different from others? What makes her a princess? Birthright? Hildegard does not have that anymore... rejected by her brother, the Kaiser, she is now not more than a Vice-Admiral in the Zitragradian Navy, her adoptive homeland. But then again, any Auestriker in the Naukograd would see her as a princess, their princess specifically. As long as she behaves as a Taussian princess -- a war machine in shape of a woman, her little realm will love her as much as she loves them. Perhaps she finds similar things in the Overboss, that they both are an embodiment of their own states.

But even a creature of war like her does not always desire violence and chaos. It seems like the Archprincess is readily regarding him with a slight dismay... although it also appears that she actually misunderstands Shawn's purposes a little.

"I think I have never come across the gentleman himself before. Quite an unruly character, an unconventional one among politicians. It does make me wonder how he fares in the face of stern and grey world leaders on the international stage. He fits the character of his regime, but perhaps not the expectations of the world outside the borders."

"I find his quest to liberate the people he seems oppressed rather violent and borderline interventionist. It will be difficult in a normal circumstance to not expect him of trying to expand his sphere of influence, but apparently Herr Bjornson runs on idealism and foolhardiness. But here is my caution for him: not every semblance of order is oppressive... and violence is hard to extinguish once ignited and burned."

"Another spoiled Royal who puts on a set of fatigues and eats a few rations, then decides they are a 'True Soldier' and calls to lead them. It's disgusting quite frankly how often such a thing happens. A woman raised with tutors who spoon fed her royalist slime along with her sciences and cultural texts. At least this one seems to know how to shut themselves up though, which is infinitely better than the royals who parade around their filthy bloodline any way they can. Though as it seems, her silence comes from a lack of individualism in her, a lack of the mercy and sentience that makes a truly great leader.

But this does not change our opinion on her as a whole. She calls herself humble yet she lives being held up as a Princess. She tries to hide the fact that she was given her little position off of birthright by acting forgiving and aloof. It's truly more of a wonder why such a whelp would keep glorifying and defending a regime that took away her actual political power.

But that brings us to our final point. This princess is the perfect symbol of the brainwashing and horrific trends that come with monarchy. A child dressed in military regiment and paraded around as a killer, told she is the ultimate war machine because she does not speak, she does not think, she only acts. It's disgusting, and our army tacticians have felt the need to mention that it's militarily ineffective. They are a sad husk of a sentient being, and we hope that her family may be overthrown so that her soldiers can live in a world free from the tyranny of bloodright rulership."

"The feelings given out by these fellows are quite intriguing. They pride themselves in their fanatical pursuit for equality, something I can easily relate to. And yet I find that at odds with their equally fanatical loathing of a monarchy. It's puzzling, really. They suffer under a bad regime, and then brand all monarchies, not just their own, as tyrannical. I daresay that many of them are unaware of the benevolence of some rulers. It is a fine illustration of one of my people's most cherished proverbs: 'A rotten plant does not rot the garden.' If this rotten plant is rooted out and replaced with a pure one, a plant that can work in harmony with the rest of the garden, then it is better for all. These fellows have rooted out a rotten plant, their monarchy, and replaced it with a new one. But their attitude to the other plants in the garden jeopardizes them; they stand to become another rotten plant. I do not wish to see that happen, but this High Council has eagerly set out on that path. It brings pain to my heart."

His actions speak of nothing but greed and selfishness, the willingness to give up all those close to him for the benefit of himself, just for the sake of placing endless amounts of gold and silver into his vaults with reckless abandon. There is also a useful amount of force required in any situation, but he enslaves his subjects and fellow beings in manners even those useless Prefecture-leaders would find repulsive. I find myself reassured however by the fact that just as spring always comes, so someday, he will be deposed, and that will indeed be a day of cheerful rejoicing for his nation's people.

And though my subject is not his nation's Sovereign, I must here too criticise him for his weakness; even as he consolidated strength he has left himself open to puppetry and foolery. Even in power, he is but a subject."

"I just devoted some time to reading the entirety of Nova's file, and I must say I am most intrigued and fascinated. I must admit, I had long dismissed the oddly famous Roswell Incident as a weather balloon accident and nothing more, but these new reports paint a picture of a most curious offworld society, and - more to the point here - a very interesting individual. In her timeline, at least. I should not get ahead of myself.

I am of course a far cry from understanding Nova's society of origin in full detail - messenger foxes have not been to space, if that is not clear already - but from what I do know it seems she was selected from a young age for her role as a pilot. Moving further along her life's timeline, she seems to have become rather skilled at it, the accident in New Mexico notwithstanding; such a thing was horrific, but ultimately I cannot hold her morally responsible for it. During her time on Earth she developed a surprisingly close relationship with humanity despite their technological inferiority. It is actually quite stunning how biologically similar the two species are, though what this suggests I cannot say. I may have been rambling too long at this point. What I can say is that she has shown great empathy with her new neighbors here on Earth, and seems set up to play a key part in ensuring its continued independent existence in her timeline."

(OOC note: I really enjoyed reading your writing there, and felt like I had to give some kind of response afterward. I hope my response ended up alright, it's pretty late at night here and my writing may not be at its best.)

IC Name: Ketorushima

Arctic island inhabited by kitsune and other yōkai.

Set about a decade after the world becomes aware of the supernatural. Details on that will come later.

Slowly trying to rework the factbooks and write for this nation again. Sometimes I worry I'm bad at writing but I think I'm getting better

"The High Priestess is definitely quite a commendable leader for her people, she definitely seems like during her time in office will be able to/has done a lot to improve the nation, her diplomatic stance is fantastic to, definitely someone we could be friendly with" - King Christian II

"Ahem, erm... with that out of the way..." General-President Lutsao Baije said, cleaning up from the previous incident. "This Priestess... Can't say I don't have experience with religious types. I've never been one founded in faith; for me, any gods have probably left Tsaivao long, long ago. I do find this to be a welcome reproach from the dogma of the Majai or whatever folk-tales my people have come up with to justify killing each other. You actually use your platform to preach a peaceful way of life, of acceptance and tolerance. However, I feel as though I should warn you from personal experience, that avoidance of the political and diplomatic world does not make it go away. The "Friendly Solitude," as you eloquently phrase it, is a fragile beast. Do not be led to decadence or negligence, you could have enemies in any corner of this universe, and you would do best to stay on guard. Your people are lucky to have you as their leader, but do not let your strive for peace deny you the foresight to prepare for war."

"Also, completely unrelated question, but... Are the ears on top of your head your actual ears? Or are there ears under the hair on the sides of your head? I only ask since I've seen several humans... er... human-ish creatures, and they never seem to give me a straight answer when I ask..."

"Our experience with the extraterrestrial has been... far from ideal, to say the least. But New Albania is always willing to welcome any potential new allies into the fold, even if there may be a few ideological differences. His distaste for war is... understandable. Not all are built for the rigors of it, some break, some do not. There is little shame in it."

"Again, another one who fights for nothing but power. It is acceptable to claim a throne with all you have, even if it costs people your lead their lives, but a proper ruler must then return upon his subjects a favour for their loss and sacrifice. Only then will they lead a prosperous nation with reign unbroken. Alas, this one does not seem interested in any of that...rather, he chases only the political privileges of such positions. And so his reign will be short, lasting not autumns upon autumns but rather for only a few more waxing cycles of the jade orb¹."

"No matter what, I won't forget those days we spent together."

"No matter what, I won't ever leave your side."

Time never stops flowing and seasons change, those innocent days of the past might never return.

Two sisters, eternally bound by blood and friendship, had one another in rainy skies and shining sun.

For they know deep in their hearts that no matter what, spring always comes and flowers will bloom.
