Their leader was only ever a first lieutenant in their nation's army. He did get wounded in combat, but he was supposedly fit to return to combat.

That is, until both the King and Queen at the time died and he was discharged.

Chetzufikism is apparently made up of left-liberal social policies with ecological policies and goals that can be considered as relating to some kind of technophilia and/or transhumanism.

While being an NPT signatory, the Commonwealth of Arcadia is still known to possess around 1200 nuclear warheads, of which around 400 are deployed, with submarines and ICBMs being the most preferred means of delivery.

And people thought that the Valentians are crazy for having 16 ICBMs despite our pacifist status. Ahh, well, I suppose we should boost our own armies a little as well in case of aggression!

I also do love more lore about the game called Hazard! Gives the nation and their people more background, more culture, and more dimension. Good to see a nation that does not have 20 factbooks for their weapons of mass destruction that can kill other nations in mere seconds.

Their primary language rather specifically requires every single citizen to be a polyglot. While this is not inherently problematic, language arts classes in school must be a real bear to work through... and foreign languages are required just to talk about different subjects...

Looks like Godulans use a rite of initiation known as M'Leck'Torr. The rite, described as transcendently painful, involves being possessed by some sort of creatures from the other 'realm' (dimension?) that seek an easier way to die than available in their home realm. While I don't know the exact scope of applicability of the M'Leck'Torr initiation, there is some evidence that the entire Chiss population had undergone the rite, and one of the most 'eager' (as far as this word can be applied) to participate, known as Ilia'Tyr'Nuruodo, had eventually assumed office of the High Executor (Executrix) of the Godulan Homeguard.

They claim to follow an ideology that champions feminism, yet is also pro-life. Hmm.

Above Ninja: They are presently engaged in a war to conquer Tunisia, allied with Trump...

There is no way that will go wrong.

Godulans are really good engineers and remind me of the Forerunners from Halo. Especially since they have a thing for machinery and robotics. They also have an unhealthy obsession with Mega Blo... I mean, Legos.

From what I can tell, it is basically if the far left ruled half the planets in the solar system. Also the politics are described as "dark green". That sounds scary. Like eco-friendliness to a terroristic degree.

Out of all the WMDs they possess, they do not explicitly mention biological agents even if it is very likely that they do possess them considering their quip about the World Assembly.

I feel like people assume that adherence to the WA rules is required. First of all, who in the real world listens to the United Nations? Second, what is the punishment for breaking the rules? Like what are they gonna do, attack us with an army?
