Carman Shapiro doesn't see a nuclear missile going to reset the world to the current IRL stage of the world, and gets promptly blown up, only to become a sentient clock.

It's when someone makes a poor-quality post on the forums. People who summerpost are called summerposters, or more commonly, summies. Thal Dorthat's post was absolutely not a summerpost, it was just pretty hilarious.

Anywho, y'all, back to the story!

Carman-Shapiro gets bought by an old lady named Mrs. Porridge, an unusual name, but a name nonetheless.

Koopa Troopa befriends Goomba, but the NSMB "bah-bah" kicks in, and both inevitably dance, before getting absolutely destroyed by Mario.

New sentient gravestone, with his best friends being a coffin and a friendly skeleton.

Hearse, Gravestone's uncle, just turns out to be there at the same time, releasing Coffin, and then invites him to his birthday party. Gravestone is in awe of how his uncle organized a birthday party for him, even in dark times. Gravestone, Coffin, Hearse (and don't forget Skeleton), and numerous other guests, all have a cemetery-themed birthday party together.

The Cemetery-themed fiesta even attracted several ghouls who similarly find themselves having a blast after walking in. The party, as it would seem, would go on for all eternity.

While the party goes on in that timeline, we head over to another timeline, and shift our attention to a man by the name of Burt Curtis, Burt for short.
