I'd laugh in torpedoes, only to realize that they are so large the sheer cost offset by a sufficient number of torps (and to some limited extent ASHMs... Actually, sod it, may as well be ballistic missiles, why NOT?!) still would make it a very expensive affair... With the net loss going to the one attacking the behemoth, not the one who built it.

Well, unless you manage to somehow kill it through a small meteor, in spite of the painful logistics and costs, then I guess the one yeeting the behemoth with a ROCK from SPACE would be the one winning the money game.

The great thing about them is they're just nuke/ballistic missile targets, every radar and satellite in the world is going to see these things
And if you want to get out of their range, walk away slowly and they'll struggle to keep up. Better yet, let them crumple under their own mass.

That sounds very expensive, how about submarines instead; submarines as long as Russia and powered by twenty nuclear reactors to make it fast.

Political intrigue is possible with MT or PMT nations, but in all cases, it varies on how the user executes it. However, most nations who reside in MT or PMT don't really care about that(shocker, ain't it), which is honestly a shame.

Eh, not like it matters. This place is an escape from reality, to drag everyone through the realism filter and force them to write in a realistic fashion would kill the fun of even playing at all, especially when we have choice issues where it's possible to have a talking rat give their input on pest exterminators after an office worker, a maid and an exterminator also give their input, for the sake of argument.

And then we have Z and N day, as well. And the wackiness of F7.

While yes, you'd prefer to lean hard on near-absolute realism or attempt to, nobody else should change to suit your views. Appalling, I know.

I guess one should establish standards at what logic the battle is fought. If one wants a realistic way of fighting, they could establish that at the start, but if someone wants a low-logic fight which is mostly having fun with over the top weapons, they too could establish that.

I like how everyone else misinterpreted what I said completely. I would give a better response, but right now I'm sick as fuck.

But to shorten it, what I said has nothing, and I mean nothing to do with enforcing my standards of hardcore realism on people. When did I say that in what I said? Apart from all the statements I made on here trying to be a god-damned goofball, when did I ever say that? What I was saying in what I said was virtually just:

- If you want to make a military based on how a modern military works, do your own research
- If not, up to you, but there's also the option of staying quiet on the matter

That's all that I completely said. If not, that was my intention.

I personally don't care necessarily about adhering to realistic warfare (still a milsporg though) as much I do about just low effort shit
Because at the end of the day FT nations with thousand km long planet eaters and MT nations with super dreadnought mega death battleships never actually give a good reason about why they have them or their actual purpose and just comes off as power wanking because everyone else on NS has those

There's a clear line between something that's traditionally unrealistic and something that a summer poster made in 10 minutes. If you want those giga ships it should at least fit within the context of the lore, you didn't just buy the same 5 super dreadnoughts from deviant art as everyone else, you actually put some effort into explaining why these exist. For example a land carrier is complete fantasy, but in the context of a desert world, I can suspend my disbelief. But in a nearly carbon copy of earth except for your super nation, having a 5 km long dreadnought in the year 2050 is 9/10 just low effort Dick measuring Deviating from milsporg, you don't get trucker nations at all. I would find that concept pretty interesting. Trucker union's leading a state, or a posse of trucking corps ruling a nation would be interesting spins on Syndicalism and Corporatism. Shame it ain't common, though. Only nation I've seen in relation to fuckhuge shit used to transport shit and people was some train nation that was(or still is, not sure) in TNP. I'm only mentioning this because I saw a news broadcast literally two minutes ago talking about trucking.

I think because people in general are obsessed with Israel and Palestine. Idk, in my nation's alternate Earth they don't even exist because the world got nuked, and whatever people are left have probably formed a new nation.

A post-apocalyptic nation located entirely within a megastructure amidst a burning Earth, in a world where reality barely holds together and magic arises from the cracks.

Those are events that are kind of a "controversial" topic, so I guess that could be a factor, but I don't know. It could either be a way to start a conversation, or it could be some other factor I can't think of.

At the very least, in my lore, Israel went on a conquest run in the Levant, and unsurprisingly there's separatism. A lot of it.

Because it's the most famous "controversial decision" a fictional nation can supposedly take.

I say supposedly bc knowing NSers, the vast majority people are comedians (downs) who say "duhhh, I advocate for no state solution!" Which kind of takes the whole 'delicate balance of geopolitical powers' thing out of the picture.
