The first time I heard this one I thought my dad was listening to Turkish 70's rock, I think. Then it goes all weird electronic metal mix.....then the jazz solo.

It's a habit I acquired back when I was into speed.

Pretty much. If he's the one doing the vocals in the song I just posted, he's quite the impressive and strange vocalist, too.

Kveikur is officially out today, and although I listened to the whole album on a free stream about a week ago, going to go through it again to hear it more thoroughly. The album is definitely a new and refreshing direction for the band.

Huh, Wikipedia officially says that some of Kveikur is "post-metal". Dunno if I'd actually consider it metal or not, but some of the songs (Like, 2 or 3) are definitely much closer to being metal then your typical song from Sigur Ros.

Forgot to mention this is a favorite of mine from the new album. I've been digging the small ambient horn sections at the end of some of these songs, like this one and Breinnisteinn.

Sigur Rós-Isjaki

This song seems to only kind of have a chorus. The way it sounds doesn't really feel like it has a chorus to me all that much. I believe it does, but still. Also, very interesting use of his falsetto singing in this song. There's a lot of great use of his non--falsetto singing in this album, too, but as usual he does his great falsetto singing a lot too. Sigur Ros would be strange without it.

Jesus Christ. I got a ton of McDonalds advertisements on Spotify for a while, and now I'm getting a bunch of Coca-Cola ones. I think I know who's paying them well.

Hmm it is wikipedia so it's not the final authority on music.
