Stealing a motor vehicle and operating it: Sent to prison for up to four years.
Permanent revocation of driver's license.

Stealing a historic artifact: Forced to return vehicle and up to half-value extra in punitive damages.

Any other crimes committed in the act (armed robbery, reckless endangerment, etc) will be punished separately.

Seems like you've been ninja'd there mate. I suppose I'll cover the both of you.

Filipinn: We will be willing to overlook it a little. The maximum you can go above the speed limit is 5km/h, after that expect some fines.

Bears Armed: 10,000-25,000CR fine/imprisoned for 5 years.

Law is a complex beast at the best of times. It gets even more complicated for how non-government organizations like us handle such things. Now, first of all, we operate in a lot of different countries, each of which have different laws. So expect this answer to reflect that fact. Secondly, a number of the charges you provided, well... some of them don't exist over here, or are otherwise covered by different charges. Most of the charges have different names than what you gave, but that's a different story. Anyways...

About Those Charges You Listed

As for what we'd do about it? That depends entirely on if our members were hurt or not.

If this attack didn't hurt our members or their friends/family, nor harmed any of our property, nor interfered with our operations, we'll just pull back our services from the perpetrator - they are clearly intent on drawing lots of heat, and we don't want to deal with that. If they get pissy about this, they can suck it up, they should have thought about that before doing such a blatantly public crime. If they get violent with our representatives and service providers when denied service, we'll just stab or shoot them and dump the body somewhere, maybe a gutter.

If this attack did hurt our members or their friends/family, harmed our property, or interfered with our operations, or was otherwise clear that the intent was to do one or more of these things, we'd make an example of the perpetrator. We would send assassins to kill them, then mutilate the corpse and string it up by its entrails in a public place, as a warning to anyone else who would attempt this.

In any case, we don't care about the drug use though, even if it was a substance that's illegal where we're operating - we probably sold them whatever they were on, or one of our competitors did.

EDIT:

Regicide? If it was not one of our leaders, then it depends on if we had successfully corrupted the government or not.

If we did not, we'll just withdraw our services from them. They are clearly going to draw a lot of heat. Lawmen are going to be all over that like flies on a cadaver, and we don't want to deal with that. Law enforcement is bad for business.

If we had successfully corrupted the government, then this undermines our operations. We'll either kill them ourselves, or work with law enforcement (if they're corrupt too) to have them arrested, knowing they'll be executed.

If it was one of our bosses, we'll have them killed, and their mutilated cadaver strung up in public by their organs. We'll also hunt down their family and do the same to them. People will know it was someone who crossed the cartel, and they'll know that's what awaits them if they do so.

Insulting YL?

Depending on the seriousness of the offence - a fine if it is minor; the confiscation of property if it is major/repeated and committed by a chapman; confiscation of land (up to and including exile) if it is major/repeated and committed by an abel; execution by firing squad if it is tribute necessary for an ongoing war effort, as this would constitute treason.
