The Catgirl Republic has finished constructing the Mowlasa Line, a defensive line of artillery, walls, bunkers, tunnels, and fortifications to defend the surrounding borders of the Republic. This'll hopefully be helpful in deterring a ground invasion by surrounding Martian factions should an event like that arise.

But the fears of war were true. Images through satellites orbiting Mars and other reconnaissance technology showed that the two factions on Mars, the Raiki—dwarf size creatures with orange skin and a humanoid body of orange scales like a lizard—and the Nal'xiso—fifteen-foot tall creatures with eight thin legs (like an arachnid) that hold their round circular body and four arms, and they have light amounts of fur and hair on their body and their head is hunched from the front of their body—were moving ground troops close to the Catgirl borders in the tens of thousands. Raiki military spaceships were spotted intimidating exiting Catgirl merchant vessels from Titan and Mars which continued to build up tensions amongst the nations.

M'yri'ah now a top diplomat and explorer of the Catgirl Republic was sent to the Raiki capital for peace negotiations but things immediately went downhill as the Raiki began citing their religious texts of the Catgirls as being false "abominations" that were mistakenly created by the Martians. And that they should be destroyed to remove them from existing at all. M'yri'ah is then forced out of the city of Raiki and disappointedly realizes that war is in the mist.

Nal'xiso spaceships start harassing Catgirl vessels in the asteroid belt, leading to a skirmish between some of the vessels wishing to defend themselves and the Nal'xiso ships worried the Catgirls are threatening their asteroid mining bases. This becomes the last straw and immediately the Nal'xiso and Raiki declare war and start offensives. The two Martian factions continue to attempt to get other factions involved in the conflict but for now, it remains them vs the Catgirls.

Fighting rages hard as the Catgirls not only fight for their independence but also their right to exist. The Mowlasa Line holds itself quite well as the Catgirls utilizing the southern Martian highlands to bombard and send loads of highly explosive artillery shells to suppress the offensive Martian soldiers. The Raiki find themselves forced undercover and instead focus on a policy of tunneling to avoid the Catgirl defenses. Nal'xiso military forces focus themselves on fighting the Catgirls in the air and also in space, with major dogfights fought within the asteroid belt utilizing light fighter spaceships to weave through the belt for sortie missions.

Things remain in a stalemate so far but the Catgirls plan a major counteroffensive to drive back the two Martian factions in order to dissuade the other Martian factions from joining the war, making things

The Capuchin Polity-Catgirl Republic technological initiative has born fruit in the form of a production-ready Banana-Catnip Superluminal Drive. The first BCSD-equipped Capuchin Navy vessels as well of those of the Catgirl Republic have now begun to leave shipyards.

The new drives have revolutionized the war between the belligerent countries of Earth and the Catgirl-Capuchin alliance. Each battle becomes nothing more than either a massacre or a mass surrender.

Finally, a peace treaty is signed in the HRE's capital, with concessions to the Alliance soon to follow.

A huge Twitter movement supporting the earth makes them unsign, get all of the earth to stop fighting each other and join the Earth Coalition and start making toys on the same level as the CC. All capuchins that support the CC alliance flee the earth.

The Earth Coalition immediately falls apart due to the nuclear winter brought on by the multitude of nuclear attacks. Hydroponic domes are quickly constructed around crucial banana plantations, but several are not completed in time and are abandoned. Efforts continue to mitigate the steadily worsening climate, and capuchin emigration to Ceres and the surrounding Asteroid Belt has hit an all-time high

After a Ra'ki fighter shot down a Capuchin miner, the Polity immediately declared war on the Ra'ki, and immediately sent substantial amounts of military aid to the Catgirl Republic. The two nations are building up to launch a major attack on the Na'xiso and Ra'ki, but the planned location of the offensive is kept top secret.
