We should forbid mentioning circles at this point, because mentioning it tends to cause our discussions to become more circular than a Christmas tree train.

It really is a trope, at least in the States! My family never put a train around the tree, but I did see it in novels and Christmas movies. Trains feature in all sorts of American Christmas imagery, whether as gifts, decoration, or symbols of people coming home for Christmas.

I've, uh, never heard of the Christmas pickle, though. That's a new one on me. o.0

No one even rides the train here in the US, so why would that even be a thing?

Seeing as you live in the States too, maybe it's a regional thing?

But while folks don't ride trains now, people sure used to, and trains became major symbols of industry, capitalism, modernism, and, progress. (Not saying those are connected, but in the American media imagination, they often are.) And boy does America enjoy its symbols of industry!

The train-Christmas connection is in books like The Polar Express, a Christmas trainset features prominently in the book When the Dolls Woke, and one can still buy a wide variety of specifically-Christmas trainsets online.

This seems to happen a lot on the WA and GP forums, when "regular" posters "talk down" to newer posters in the most annoyingly infuriatingly sassy way, like, "honey" or "sweetheart" words 😏

Cliché: People who make low effort replies to just say "I don't know" or "no opinion".

Also, if one more person in "what did you learn from ANs factbooks" posts "I learned Sophia in England is not a nation" or "I learned Reverberating Days is a story and not a nation", I think I'm going to quit that thread.

as for people who do this on F7 and dont even write elsewhere, thats just laziness ig

Revisiting this, that is why I have never touched GA and SC before. I have done issue-writing, participation in multiple forms of RP (II, NS Sports, P2TM), issue-answering (comes with statistics!), and heck yes, even NSG for casual conversation.

But other than Silly Joke Proposals for the fun of it, I have never ever written a GA/SC proposal, and I don't think I will be doing it anytime soon. Same goes to Raiding and Defending, which is inevitably the only thing that is mandatory and everyone must participate, lest you get raided; though a password is more than enough for the most parts, and even then you get "Liberate [Region]" because I don't know, passwording a region seems like so much of an affront to the Gods. If you think NSG can get cutthroat, it's even worse somewhere else.

Rant over, sorry! ^^;
