There is no official punishment for that, but members of the public may insult you or peddle you as a traitor or Britainbashing loony online.

insulting the national military

There's no law specifically against it, but a number of ways it can cause trouble. All adult men below retirement age are drafted into the fyrd; for one of them to insult it would be somewhere between contempt and insubordination, punishable by fines, forfeiture of pay, imprisonment, and even death in the most extreme circumstances. Given that the officer corps are made up of the æpelu (nobility), insulting them would fall under lèse-majesté laws - and given the æpelu (generally an ealdorman) are the legislative power within a shire, punishment can be quite severe - generally finest, but at the most extreme involved cutting out the tongue of the offender (all decisions, however, are appealable up to the cyning, and the current one would not stand for such a punishment).

For the record I meant the high-seas variety, but this is still a great answer nonetheless!

mate... you need to add a crime for the bn to respond to... and that honestly isn't a very good response either...

Assuming we don't get completely wiped out, we're going to bloody get you. We'll send a nice little SAJ team your way wherever you are to put a few bullets in your head.

looks like an finally put a crime to respond to, anyhow...

An oil spill that is the result of negligence is punishable by seizure of whatever oil rig was responsible by Milipol officials, and owner/manager assigned will be made to pay quite a hefty fine.

This reminds me of a crime that I didn't exactly get a good response to from AN: blowing up a dam.

AAN:

If that oil spill was the result of individuals Knowingly Polluting Rivers or Waterways with Harmful Substances Resulting in Death, then it would be a capital offense, if it was knowingly done but did not result in death, it would be life imprisonment.

AN:

If it is an act of terrorism or results in people's deaths, it is a capital offense.

Related Capital Offenses in Zohania:

Acts of Terrorism

Arson (or Destruction Using Explosive Devices) of Buildings, Vehicles or Harvests Resulting in Death

Sabotage to Public and Economic Utilities Resulting in Death

Blowing up a dam could very well result in death or be an act of terrorism. So, ending up in front of a firing squad 6 months after being caught is highly likely Depends on the context. Are you just doing it to random folks on the street? Public indecency and assault, book 'em. However, you might get off on a Theurge's exemption if you a) have a very good lawyer, b) say that spirits of nature told you to do it, and c) those spirits don't particularly feel like answering a Druid's questions.

EDIT: Some wording and forgot to post my own crime. Oops.

Overseas bank account getting seized and the suspect getting a massive fine, if they cannot pay the fine after seizing their overseas bank account they will be imprisoned with the sentence being a minimum of 1 year, with another year added for each year they evaded taxes. For example; If a movie star evaded taxes for 10 years and got caught the minimum sentence they will be imprisoned for would be 11 years.
