That they're all robots, have an unlimited supply of almost everything, and they were founded as libertarian socialists. And ideology, that by name, doesn't make much sense.

And, that they're more or less like me, at least not that far from it.

something i kinda-sorta knew before now but had semi-reinforced was that posadism's whole thing about nukes is only partly Elme reveling in destruction and partly also a legitimate criticism of revolutionary movements claiming that it's easy to overthrow a capitalist system- assuming all other assumptions are correct posadism claims that you'd need something on the order of a nuclear conflict to break down that order. which sorta makes sense within that ideological lens, i suppose.

it then proceeds to go "hey y/known what what if we took this V2 and reset this twisted game to "zero"" and it loses me completely.

there actually are meanings to the names and they aren't just languagey sounding gibberish, even has an etymology. personally, i'd render the words a little more since names often reflect an older form of the language, but i guess they used modern words at the time they were coined.

No, that's a good point. I've considered that with names but most of the names were actually made before the language took shape and while they more or less followed the rules of pronunciation for Ghesite they didn't follow any real linguistic common sense; the "-us" names and Khauvighn were written to be older forms but the rest are too straightforward in how they fit into the actual language and probably need reworking. Thanks for bringing that detail to my attention. I'm not good at conlanging in the slightest so any help is appreciated.

NATO and Warsaw Pact engaged in a limited war (no use of nuclear weapons, no large scale battles and "only" 31 000 dead) because of the declarations of the president of the EU. On an unrelated note, the EU seems to be portrayed as a fairly oppressive and repugnant entity, even before turning fascist.

They have so-called "priest-diplomats" who are tasked with engaging in diplomacy with other political entities as they have demonstrated before by mediating disputes between city-states. A priest-diplomat is often accompanied by a military advisor whose role is to determine if a nation is worthy of being raided. Huh, what a partner-in-crime would that be.

The PAS is a state in East Asia, encompassing OTL China and all of ASEAN, along with Papua New Guinea. It is a one-party socialist federation, which I take it to be similar to the USSR, and is centered in Manila. Additionally, they called themselves "provisional" until 1992. I also learnt that the PAS engages in eugenics, and citizens have no say in who they will be paired with.

Also, what font is that? Kinda adds to your vibe ngl

so, the first prime minister of the DRG got kicked out of school as a kid because the area saw a law passed restricting education for whites. did it say why they wanted that? i read it but i'm not fully here, so sorry about that. also, as head of the communist party, he was preceded by a guy named william sherman. i'm wondering if there was a t in his name somewhere. also also, the monarchy was abolished in 1902, with control passed to masato. ninja'd: ...meme government. reddit flag. i've learned that the above user used to be... something else alright

While the majority of the CSA's land make sense from a territorial point of view -Not only do most of these territories have a history with the CSA and in some sense don't have the same sense of belonging to the US as other states- it also holds Alaska, which doesn't make sense because the CSA has no open access to the Pacific, making it a little hard to defend Alaska in normal situations.

Every division of the Peacekeeping Army shares a compositional pattern of a company of Babaylan. In Pre-European Filipino and Malaysian culture, the term Babaylan referred to Faith-Healers and Shamans who were specialists in the fields of culture, religion, medicine and all kinds of theoretical knowledge about the phenomenon of nature. Their function in the army is similar. The Babaylan are utilized as Field Medics, Technicians, Hackers, and Communications Experts. Their primary directive is to aid combatants on the field, and are not to be confused with Field Engineers, who are tasked with Repairs and Fortification. A Company is led by a Captain, or Kapitan; who reports directly to the Datu (Usually a Division/Regiment/Company Commander). Aside from their Field Duties, the Babaylan also function as the Tech Advisors to the Kapitan.

In the Pan-Asiatic states, one of the prevailing "religious" theories is something called "god-building." The basic concept of god-building is the formalization of the process by which cults of personality or the like are formed; it's social engineering on the largest possible level. The processes by which religions are formed are on a meta-level identified and applied to the Pan-Asiatic States' Communist Party, and originated from Anatoly Lunacharsky's realization that given that if the aim of socialism is freedom then that freedom must include freedom to practice religion however one sees fit, but that nonetheless the religions of the old world have been corrupted by the old world order socialism seeks to overthrow, and that socialism's empirical approach to things should thusly be applied to religious practices in order to further the revolution- those faiths that survive, I assume, will be those that were not twisted to harm the proletariat, and thus deserve a place in the new socialist order.

Rather cool theory, all said. Internal self-consistence isn't something you see all too often in literary ideologies.
