Asking about yourself/your nation in threads where questions are needed. I have seen a few in "Answer Above Leader's Question" and I feel like it is a little jarring to see some people use it as a platform to get extra opinions. There are reasons Q&A exists...

And then on those Q&A, people will go there to ask "What is your opinion on me lololol", but at least the difference is that on there, you can opt to not answer.

I wouldn't really count on it... not yet, at least. I have seen the royalty with a lot of pre-titles, but none as long as the Valentians with actual names instead of 20+ pre-titles.

So this is something that is just a me-thing... for now. I hope I keep it that way! ^^ I got rooted out so many times that it's my puppet nations thanks to the character names.

But you're from New Zealand. You should already know your life is a lie by now. Actually come to think of it can people who don't exist have thoughts about their lives in a country that is also not real? Someone help me with this I'm not exactly sure.

Think of it. The Australia not being real thing was a cover-up for the real non-existent country. New. Fucking. Zealand. Remember how many maps there are with no New Zealand on them? Exactly, there's a lot of them, which proves that New Zealand is only added by professional cartographers who play into the great conspiracy that is New Zealand.

I mean, those questions are not interrogation, but rather "getting to know you". I don't know any context where that would be appropriate.

^ This.

If you don't want to answer a question, don't answer the question. It's not required for a reason, it's just that people like talking about their nations, especially to other people, and if you don't like to do that, that's fine too.

The thing is that, imagine, if everyone does that and in the end everyone is just using question-related threads to get extra opinions for themselves rather than helping one another with character-making or worldbuilding like they are usually intended to. It will not be illegal, but it will be annoying like your neighbor parking his car in front of your house. This applies especially in F7 threads where threads may get autopruned if no one wants to answer a certain thing.

My solution for this is more opinion threads lololololol

People asking about themselves and telling me to give out opinions have only happened twice or thrice to me, fortunately, in the "Ask AU a question" thread. I think it's a little fun when they specifically ask what somebody from my IC world would think about their nation or how a character of theirs would fare in my Canon.

Oh, I've also been asked over how many drugs I've tried in the "Random Questions" thread once, as well as being asked whether I had a crush on another user on this site.

Tbh, I actually was kinda tempted to answer the first one.
