Not a crime.

Technically, any Disorder citizen sufficiently pissed off at another could invoke the process of dispute-resolution. But since almost all Disorder citizens can fly, and fewer still would be injured or even inconvenienced by being shoved off of a building, and cloning & regeneration technologies are abundant, it's absurdly unlikely to happen.

And, for the rest of the universe? It sucks to be them. Disorder citizens can shove others off of buildings, consequence-free. Entities outside the Disorder have no acknowledged right to engage in dispute resolution.

So, shoplifting? The shop owner is likely going to shoot up the stealer with a shotgun armed with salt (it will not kill anyone but will hurt like hell), and if the police will get on this than the shoplifter is in for at least a month of jail followed by 1-2 months of correctional services.

Cloning Hitler? The clone themselves does not remember any of the crimes that the "original" has committed and the person (or organization) responsible for the cloning claim to have done it to "save the aryan race". What would happen to the clone and the organization?

Depends on what you trespassed on and the damage done. If no damage (you just walked around where you weren't supposed to) you'd face a fine. Damages are generally considered a separate crime.

Trespassing in more severely restricted areas (aka government facilities) might earn you several months in prison.

If a case of false identity in order to illegally seize public powers, 5 to 10 years in jail. 15 to 30 years in jail if a senator, the chancellor, the emperor, or another public figure that may threaten the national security and stability.

habitats) is completely unregulated territory as far as the Disorder is concerned. Disorder citizens are free to rearrange its contents in any way that they see fit.

In a few million, or billion, or trillion years, the Disorder might revisit this policy. But for this particular epoch in history, the Disorder has reached an almost unanimous conclusion that doing whatever the fuck they want with the universe's contents is totally fine. They see absolutely no risk & no hazard in this - and they're also confident that subjecting the cosmos to their whims is beneficial. It's for the good of all chaos - literally.

Crash the economy is more fun than troubles and hack the world sounds cool. And considering we don't have computers, we ain't affected so who cares. Creating AI is illegal though, as is dealing with most form of technology. Except if you're military. So probably confiscation of all your electronic material and a fine, but that's about it. As a Kikittaukakian citizen, you could even enjoy 24/7 state protection against foreign powers wanting to take you down. And might get a job in the defense minister that would pay back your fine in a few days of salary.
