Sometimes it does get a bit technical, to be fair. I don't know whether it's just the forums, because sometimes even the 400 px image gets a little magnified, at least on the computers. And the 1800 px images do go ACROSS my entire 4K screen.

(This is not to defend the large images; actually sometimes, that goes to show that one needs to be a bit mindful, or just put a spoiler).

Honestly in 99% of cases there is literally no reason to post an image bigger than like 500px wide tbh.

I blame 4K monitors. My main displays are 1024x768 and 1440x960, and 250px is a perfectly reasonable size on them but would be microscopic without scaling on, say, a 3840x2560 panel.

I just keep my 1080p laptop screen set to 125% scaling unless I'm playing this one specific game that I have to set the scaling to 100% otherwise everything is too big when playing.

And then I get used to everything being smaller and when I go back to the 125% scaling I go 'Wtf why is everything so huge'.

I recently got one thanks to, well, my spoiled-ass. 🤔

That, and photography is great on the thing, along with documents and everything else, they are crisp. Only problem is, well, things got too big for the rest of the internet, which I am very aware of.

(Before that I forced 4K onto a 1080p monitor.)

Super annoying when people do this. Also, it usually throws the formatting of the rest of the post completely off and makes it look terrible.

Not really a cliché, but just wanted to ask: does anyone else go through almost every single unread topic and read their BNs and reply to some topics in F7 after they leave NS to do other things? I personally like seeing my BNs' responses to me in the AN threads.

I will do that, yes, especially if it's one of the "so and so about the Above Nation/Below Nation". I also do not comment outside of F7 because I would check the replies too much and probably get into pointless arguments on here haha which I'm not here to do. Just here to roleplay in my region, mostly.

Also, in regards to the OP, one big cliché I have noticed is cyborg/transhuman nations. It is a cool concept for sure, not knocking it, but it has become cliché AFAIK.

I wonder if anybody had an idea of getting an OOC motto like I, in a bout of very much the cleverness, just did. Like, "In Order We Thrive, in Chaos We Decline" is my actual IC motto, not "at least its not turkmenistan," like what real nation would have that as a motto?

Tbh, Discord has a similar issue, where fuckhuge images are crushed down in size, but sometimes smaller images are scaled up hilariously so you get to see the wonderful jpg-ness of a 30x30px image in glorious 820x820px with all the compression of a horribly abused jpg from like, 2005.

Should use a [code] bracket around it all to get it to work, plus remove the color tags just so that way people won't copy your own style of formatting 1:1 despite it being a template.

This is nothing new, but fuck's sake do I hate it, not just because it makes posts look much more of a hassle to look at (even in a 1080p screen at 100% scaling, like what I use), but also because this is an issue that shouldn't even exist in the first place if you use any other image editing programs that aren't MSPaint because they let you resize the image while keeping the original aspect ratio. Or hell, just crop the damn image in the first place.

And if you really need gigantic images for whatever reason, just spoiler them, please. Makes things look nicer.

I mean, it's for my personal use. (And I do believe it's not likely to be copied, since it involves cropping an image into a circle and resizing it into exactly 39 x 39 px.) I don't use [code] in the dispatch because I wanna see the result.

Oh.

Still, it would be nice to have some (easier) to fill templates for replies that don't involve some serious coding fuckery that needs one to know basic coding.

I've experimented a bit, turns out an easy short-term fix is a simple table. The downside (actually no, this is an amazing upside) is that the text should be sufficiently long, else the proportions becomes as bad as before.

Shit that actually WORKS. Far better than the hilariously cluttered templates for wiki pages that look like a mess of brackets and requires a guide or two to assist with breaking it down and making use of it.

The table code is honestly the worst BBcode tho just because of how common it is for people to not realize you don't space out the code, otherwise you end up with massive empty spaces above your table.

We need a better code system or better-written guides that can assist with this sort of junk.

See I can't fully blame people for spacing out the code, especially if they have a large table.

Like look at the code for one of the tables in my GBC storefront in GE&T

[illegible]

That is a goddamn mess of code and it's honestly a miracle that I've never completely fucked it up while editing.

I actually really hope the new forum upgrade (whenever that happens) adds a WYSIWYG editor instead of having to rely solely on BBCode for this stuff.

If you would like, you can try stuff like Sublime Text or any other editor that takes out the new lines (\n) after you are done with each lines.

My way is a little... convoluted. I set a certain amount of columns, run an Excel formula through the cells, THEN take out the new lines. It's actually pretty damn headache-inducing. >,<

Here's how the Excel formula looks like for one of my projects (the one with the heights of the leaders):

CODE: SELECT ALL

This is the reason why I seldom refer to formatting on anything, and then people screech at me for not "uSiNg dA fOrMaTtInG" as if that's what makes a factbook book. No, not the contents, or the information, hell not even the topic (if there is one)... But just the formatting alone.
