Selling lemonade from a lemonade stand is not a crime here, but they would still punish themselves for selling it. We have a lot of bureaucratic red tape here, so our harsh food safety standards would stagnate a lemonade stand quickly.

Until there's concrete evidence that they're members of a mafia, and you have permission from the police, you may be charged for "mass manslaughter" and sentenced to 10 years of imprisonment.

Giving a middle finger to the People's Minister is entirely protected. Giving a middle finger to the King, while legally allowed, would be a death sentence for a career if someone did it.

and influence, if the falsification is severe enough (e.g. false credentials helped put you in a position of considerable influence over policymaking), it may go all the way up to death penalty. We take attempts at manipulating the fabric of society in bad faith very seriously. The staff who was complicit in the forgery would face hefty fines and potentially permanently lose their right to work in academics either way.

About 5-10 years in prison.

Knowingly buying alcohol for/selling alcohol to underage people?

Buying alcohol in itself is a crime in three federal states in Zaranistan, however in the federal states where it has been legalized, it is a crime punishable up to 15 years imprisonment and a hefty fine for purchasing alcohol for underage people. It should further be noted that the legal age for consumption of alcohol in Zaranistan is between 23-25 years old in all jurisdictions.

For the show's producers, STC 10,000 fine and forced cancellation of the program for "hate speech towards one or more ethnic groups". Further repeats may result in 10-year imprisonment.

For the broadcaster, a formal warning for "airing contents that violate the Broadcast Guidelines of the Department of Media Regulation".

Second repeat: heavy fine of STC 100,000. Third repeat: revocation of the broadcaster's broadcasting licence.
