Their leader practices psinoics with all the other canon on the ESC considered. That is very unique and original, as I usually see more general magic and such with different nations. Combined with the seeting, that makes for an interesting basis for the story.

The black market is, in some ways, supported and monitored by the government. Though authorities are aware of the black market existence and its activities, it rarely interferes unless they are aware armaments are being sold via the black market to support rebel causes. The government in fact uses the black market to obtain resources cheaply and outside the prying eyes of public accountability via the People's Hall. So, fittingly, the black market has become the basis of a black budget.

This is something I found more humorous than anything else, while digging through... But they have a ministry of administrative affairs, responsible for tasks that really don't fit anywhere. Such as communication between ministries. And, well, Administrative asks in general. Don't know why, but I felt that was kind of amusing.
