And... he sends unsolicited explicit sexual videos to political opponents?! As a tactic to disorient them before the debaes? Damn! Why haven't I even think about this? Most of my opponents are conservative... this gonna hit em' hard. I'll be sure to give something awesome to Spymaster Blackbird for this dossier! And... these facts gave me also another idea, I think, I know, what I am gonna do today. Go into darknet and try and track down some terrorist or pedophile gang. I ain't hacker myself, so spymaster gonna id me with this part. Then I'll go there at night with my gun for some target practice, and looting afterwards gonna fetch me some beer money. Or should I go Batman and just beat shit out of some scum?"-Shawn Bjomson

"Bjomson has the claim to be recognized as a prodigy by his inherited intelligence without need for lower and higher education being required to find a prodigy. However, it is difficult to truly see him as one when gazing upon his society. It is chaos, controlled, yes. But still chaos incarnated as he hasn't bothered to put his talents to test by creating orderly, civilized, and cleaned society to earn the official recognition. In fact, I'm of the conclusion that Bjomson only utilizes his remarkable intelligence to remain in power as long as possible holding everything together with tape and strings. Until he eventually passes away, leaving rival warlords to compete for his position as the leader of the Sky Reavers. Otherwise, my stance is neutral."

"Alright, Holly De Stralyn end Wonderbark-lik Ligh-" (Pauses in embarrassment) "Sorry I never studied Dutch, so I'll just stick with Holly, which if you ask me, is still a very nice name on it's own! In any case, what an impressive height! 33 ft? That's almost the depth of the Panama Canal I'm pretty sure. Not that I'm judging, truly, this is very impressive. In addition, it really doesn't take an armchair psychologist to dissect her refreshingly positive frame of mind. I can comfortably say that although I don't know Holly well, I find her lively spirit so inspiring, and honestly think I could learn a lot from her. She might have a sub-zero core temperature, but she's still one of the warmest first impressions I've ever had the pleasure of experiencing."

"I have to admit, I'm not a physicist, so I'm a little lost when it comes to the academic technicalities of Holly's physical continuity, but I respect her dedication to continuing education and spiritual enlightenment. I find her archaeological-like appreciation for new worlds and discoveries very exciting, and reminiscent of the best explorers and researchers in history. Her experience with human's is...well, somewhat justified, but I still urge her to explore it further, because the flaws of humanity are also what make it great. Passion, ingenuity...it's raw and destructive, but also sophisticated and honest, and I hope she has the chance to learn more about ordinary people like me. Nevertheless, it was a pleasure to meet Holly, and I look forward to voicing our reflective thoughts together again."

[i]"Holly is an intriguing creature. I am reminded of the "Boltzmann Brain" proposed by certain humans in their late eleventh millennium. A being that formed from mere happenstance, a fluctuation of photons giving rise to something far greater.

Furthermore I am impressed by her self restraint-such beings with such power, like a certain entity I had the unpleasantry of analyzing earlier, tend to use their power to lord over those they perceive as lesser, as though they are playthings and not sapient beings, but Holly is the opposite of that. She doesn't even consider others, content with her own garden. I can see why there are those that would wish to attain her power for themselves, with the immense energy production of her body and habitat, yet this in turn demonstrates the folly of those ambitions, assuming they can contain a force of nature given a will of its own.

However, the fact that she managed to overcome her initial fears is astounding, even if she keeps to observing others over direct interaction. That is, too, an interesting outlier. Most hider entities/civilizations tend to hide and never poke their heads out, let alone observe across so many worldlines and change. Perhaps in time, she will attain the courage to fully step out into the light.

In total, my opinion of Holly is of genuine positivity. Although her shyness prevents a proper analysis of her nature, she seems benevolent at best and benign at worst, in spite of my more utilitarian side frowning on her lack of a commitment to the aid of low-entropy civilizations."

Date: June 27th, 3263 AD/703 Afterbirth

TRANSCRIPT:

///START-TEXT///

[i]"And moving on from extraordinary cosmic beings, my next piece is about a...Supermarket manager. A baseline human given a rough start in life, that managed to nonetheless overcome those limits and became a shining star in an establishment of a chain of supermarkets. Impressive, although his cheeriness can be offputting.

Of course I cannot condone all the unnecessary suffering Capitalism and similar philosophies create, but I also understand that his world is incapable of solving the problems that enable it to flourish, so I will not tirade against his endorsement of capitalistic culture.

That being said, I am going to criticize his overzealousness to his work. I can understand the urge to help others, and to even go beyond your limits when necessary, but Carl frequently pulls seventy hour weeks of work to help out and has a serious trouble with non-work-related relationships. It's an issue, and even if it is likely spawned from early issues in childhood, I have to say that it is ultimately a detriment that needs to be fixed, either on his own terms or by those that care for him.

That out of the way, my assessment of Carl is positive. He is a good person, even if somewhat misguided and uncaring for his own health at times, and if his boss were more intent on doing what he is paid to do then Mr. Kirkman could flourish into his own paths.

"Utopia is a great machine, born of fifteen fathers and fifteen mothers, divided between five species, I'll resist the obvious joke to be made of that. This thing is, or was, the perfect representation of the Ur-Pagrahnáti, with its math, science, and all that other freaky shit. The idea of a machine with a mind is totally alien to me and the fact anyone would want to create such a thing floors me. I say that and I mean it, but all the same I've gotta admit the machine has proven itself. It's always been totally loyal to it's people and age made it wise and competent in what looks like everything, it's influence expanded across galaxies- an unimaginable feat, and turned it's nation into it's namesake- a Utopia. It may be a synthetic being but it seems to feel, to love as any natural being does, the fact it's possible to create a genuine life without the sacred act is... troubling. Despite everything, I respect this machine, not as I would respect a man or a woman, it's different, I'm not sure how to explain it, but the feeling's genuine."

"'Small government' and libertarianism are just fancy ways of saying that you and all of the other politicians can't be bothered to run your own damn country, and have been reduced down to nothing more than parasites, ever taking, but not doing anything meaningful with it. Of course, I would expect nothing less than inefficiency and utter lack of competency as a leader from a filthy primitive. Religion is a symptom of mental deficiency. There is still some value to be found in this imbecilic barbarian, however: namely that their civilization, if it can even be described as that, will provide me with some entertainment as I destroy their worlds and genocide their people. Guess someone was too busy praying to their non-existent god and didn't spend enough time figuring out how they're going to stop their home world from being annihilated by antimatter. That's what you get for being a dumb primitive."

For whats essentially the God of destruction, you look pretty good but apart from that umm... yeah nothing to commend here, you did blow up a bunch of planets and those that you didn't blow up are now part of your empire which itself doesn't sound to benevolent. Before I go il just tell you that i'm not converting from Tsaotak any time soon since I have seen its validity, you may blow up the planet I live in but il just reincarnate... somewhere. So anyway have fun blowing planets.

"Free from both State and Corporate Authority? That is awfully idealistic. Nobody is truly free from either party, both will interfere in your daily lives, no matter the system. Unless you're anarchy, of course, but then, that opens the region up to be exploited by foreign powers being a mixture of both parties. If the commune has any resources that would gain their interests. Nevertheless, Inogo deserves the compliments for at least trying to create a better society for his people compared to the old, corrupt, and incompetent regime that controlled Sherechia. His harsh crackdowns on the aforementioned reminds me of the Imperial Purge that my father waged to remove unwanted elements as he consolidated his power. Not to be a cynic, I have to wonder if Inogo is truly purging imbecilic bureaucrats or is that just smoke and mirrors to just begotten of his political rivals? Time will tell. Overall, by his policies implemented play well with the populace that they will most likely turn a blind-eye if my cynicism proves correctly. I got nothing more to say, take care."
