I only saw my sister's reaction to it, went something like this:

My sister reacting to it

Little me wondering what is she looking at

When you write a General Assembly repeal and your only argument in favour of repealing the resolution is: Violates national sovereignty. 🤔🤔🤔🤔

That's the only good argument.

i don't really get why people have a problem with them. i'm not particularly interested in the anime aesthetic, but i'm not about to bash anyone for liking it or using it in their nation. just like i'm not about to bash people for making waifu flags or having flags that aren't flaglike. it's your choice, and my input shouldn't stop you from doing what you want. nor would it stop you from doing what you want. if anything, that's more of a cliché: people on this site insisting that things be done their way, and assuming that everyone else's way is an evil virus of satan. and more importantly, they assume that everyone is going to listen to them and completely drop whatever they're doing to go do... this. it's good to take criticism, but when it starts degrading the very idea and artistic notions of the work, that's when it's gone too far. the idea should still largely be your own, with improvements from others. if you want to have a waifu flag, and ten people start yelling at you about how "it's not flaglike" and "it's cringy anime" then go right ahead and put two waifus on there. (bloodshade, looking at you.) not only does that get people talking about you, it gets people to remember you. granted, they may get you confused with someone else with a waifu flag, but ~~that's why you need two~~ if they've actually read your lore, they'll remember the difference between bloodshade and khoro and laspalm and rein easily enough. of course, people never actually read your lore here (what did you expect from a bunch of 13 year olds and college students urod?), but still. maybe a couple of people will remember you.
