Thank you, that kind of makes sense by itself. Like a world conspiracy but the nation is a collection of brain vats trying to be immortal and be protected from technology because the human body can't handle it for some reason or other. Doesn't really explain why there were dissenters, how they get the knowledge of this place and what convinced them and so forth. Also doesn't really explain why the brain vats want to make such a large military force to begin with. Interesting so far and I await for you to piece together and make sense of this thing you created.

IDK if 'how people respond to your nation' counts as a cliché but whenever people look at Aikoland and think it's a Japanese/East Asian nation. Like I can get if you just judge on the name alone (because I am well aware that Aiko is a Japanese name), but the IC flag has fleurs de lys on it, the national motto is in French, the currency is the fuckin franc, the capital city clearly has a French name, etc, IDK how someone who glances at the actual nation info (or again, even just the IC flag) could think the nation is Japanese/East Asian.

i thought i was bi because i enjoyed certain special interest fiction and didn't really care who the characters were, but now i realize i wasn't attracted to them, just the scenario. don't get me wrong, an emotional connection with the characters really helps me enjoy stuff like that and it's why i really enjoy spending good quality time with my nonbinary friend, but it's not like... physical attraction to them based on their gender, it's attraction because i love them as a person and a friend.

You mean like an UltraNazbol Interuniversal High Imperia or something? I see what you mean. Gotta bring it a little down-to-earth, you know. Or at most 3 or 4 exoplanets. It's also much easier to make an alternate country where, idk, the Ottomans colonised New Zealand or something. It makes it so much more relatable.

Though, saying that, my nation is just an ideology rather than an actual nation, though I added a bit of a country, I didn't really put much effort into it. If I have a good idea (which is very unlikely), then I'll probably create an actual nation (i.e. Newjyniders and it's precursors).

Well, time will probably tell where you stand.

Anyways, I am kinda surprised at how quite a few people on this site are aces or on ace spectrum (Atheris, Danelaw, Gandoor, BCS, etc). Although, on the other side the community of this site is rather small in comparison, and it also depends on what type of people it attracts. I guess that as an aroace the most I will get are friends or comrades, but I kinda like it that way.

I noticed this too. I think it's rather pleasant, as they wouldn't sexualise anything and everything they see.

This game show, presented by Richard Hammond, is not for the faint-hearted. Made up of four challenging stages, the contestants are given gruelling physical tasks. Twenty competitors battle it out each week, dodging mud and water, in the hopes of winning the £10,000 cash prize.
